Joy From Within
Mrs. Roosevelt's Wisdom
The Roosevelt Which?
Clergymen Would Fight

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

WILMINGTON, DEL., May 10—The most cheerful sight on this trip from Florida's tropics to New York's worries presents itself in a dismal, unlikely spot. Forlorn, uncultivated land on both sides of the track, sad pine forests, every tree trunk slashed, far up and low down, with cruel white gashes, from which the tree's life flows, to produce turpentine and other products.

Beneath the trees stands a dilapidated low wooden cabin that has never known paint, the wobbling roof patched with tar paper. Such a cabin elsewhere would remind you of the lines, "Bleak without, and bare within, such the house that I live in." But not that cabin, for among the pine needles, before the open door, two small Negro children are dancing, whirling round, inventing the dance as they go, laughing, clapping their hands, singing to provide dance music. One is a boy of ten, one a girl of seven or eight.

You might travel the world over and not find two happier faces. From those children, and their joy, you learn that happiness is a product of the human heart that defies poverty and loneliness. In all their short lives they have known nothing but poverty and misery, but they refuse to be discouraged. Happiness is within.

You cannot discourage or hold down the human race while it has that quality, not by war's wholesale murder, or speculation's wholesale robbery, or "civilization's" brutal selfishness and exploitation.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose sound common sense and simplicity the people admire, says she does not quite agree with brain trust members who say the depression is over. She says:

"I am not quite so sure of it, with ten millions out of work."

The ten millions will say amen to that. They are not quite sure either, and the Department of Commerce reports the number of families on relief as of April first larger this year than at the same time last year.

Mrs. Roosevelt went to attend a ceremony at the old New York house where her father, Elliot Roosevelt, lived as a boy, with his brother, Theodore Roosevelt, the home of Mrs. F. D. Roosevelt's grandmother.

A tablet on the house tells you that it was the home of the late President Theodore Roosevelt. Some day there will be another plate, on a house at Hyde Park, overlooking the Hudson.

Which will be the more important "shrine" one hundred years hence? The next two years will answer that question.

If the present Roosevelt reaps in his experiments the success that his courage deserves, he will be THE Roosevelt, and history will merely add that he had a cousin who built the Panama Canal.

The Rev. T. Guthrie Speers says that thirteen thousand clergymen have announced their intention not to sanction or participate in any future war.

The distinguished Rev. Harry Fosdick intimates that he is ashamed of his work, as chaplain, in the big war, urging on men about to go out and kill others.

You assume that thirteen thousand clergymen cannot be wrong, but the memory of that tall, powerful Norman archbishop, dressed all in white, with a heavy mace in his right hand, riding his war horse into the thick of the fighting at the battle of Hastings, beside the conqueror and remaining among the dead, seems more romantic than a conscientious clergyman saying:

"Nothing would make me fight for my country or even pray the Lord to make my side win."

Besides, the thirteen thousand clergymen are mistaken. Every one of them would fight, if Asiatics in khaki were overrunning this country, coming down in planes, full of devitrify. If the Revs. Guthrie Speers and Harry Emerson Fosdick saw three or four such invaders, bayonets set, entering a house containing the mothers or sisters of those clergymen, the latter would surprise themselves and foreign soldiers with their performance.

Any man not a mouse would fight in a righteous war, and this country has engaged in no other, except when it went gallivanting abroad in the big war as a catspaw for financiers with bills to collect from Europe.

And the foolishness cost ten thousand millions lent, and five times as much squandered and stolen by dollar-a-year patriots and incompetents. For that kind of a war the thirteen thou-

JUDGE ACTS ON BAR'S CHARGE

Mingled Own Funds With Client's, Is Testimony in Court

John Jackson Walsh, former state Senator and a candidate for governor, some years ago, was found guilty today in the Suffolk county supreme court of breach of trust and was suspended for one year from the practice of law in this state.

Judge Edward P. Pierce found that Walsh had broken his trust by mingling with his own funds the money he was paid on a judgment he obtained in a suit against John Chmielinski of Boston.

The court ruled that $5490, the amount of the judgment, and $27 costs, was not kept separate by Walsh so that it could be readily available to his client, but that it was mixed with his own funds.

PARTNERSHIP IS CITED

Evidence introduced at the hearing showed that Chmielinski, Winfield S. Burbank, Michael J. O'Leary and Joel Bean, were engaged in a partnership in 1920.

Burbank invested $10,000 in the business. Several months later the partnership was dissolved and Chmielinski agreed to pay back the money invested by Burbank.

Later, according to the evidence, Walsh, representing Dean and O'Leary, sued Chmielinski and recovered a judgment on which Walsh was paid.

BAR BRINGS ACTION

Burbank then brought a bill in equity against Walsh, O'Leary and Bean, and was awarded $5490 and costs from Walsh. Burbank alleged that he never received the money and that some time later Walsh went into bankruptcy.

The action against Walsh was entered on the petition of the Boston Bar Association, which asked that he be disbarred.

RETIRED OIL MAGNATE IS KIDNAPED

Companion Is Tied to Tree; Family Wait a Ransom Call

By International News Service

Arcadia, Cal., May 10—Two armed and masked men early today kidnaped William F. Gettle, 67, retired millionaire oil man and former chain store executive, from his newly purchased $250,000 estate in the foothills near here.

A midnight swimming party had just broken up and Gettle, a friend, James P. Wolf, wealthy furniture man, were in a summerhouse near the pool when the two abductors entered and seized them.

Gettle was taken away in an auto.

Wolf was tied to a tree from which he escaped and sounded the alarm.

The moment a ransom demand is made it will be paid, Atty. Ernest E. Noon, spokesman for the family announced. Every effort will be made to get Gettle freed at once and no expense will be spared.

The scene of the kidnaping is ten miles from Pasadena, home of numerous wealthy persons, and 25 miles from Beverly Hills, where a majority of the movie stars have their homes.

WAIT RANSOM CALL

The Gettle kidnaping was the first important one in the vicinity of the movie colony, where many stars for a long time have had their homes guarded.

Only yesterday Loretta Turnbull, internationally famous speedboat champion, reported that she had received a kidnap warning note at her home in the adjoining city of Monrovia, and that she had armed herself.

As police threw out a dragnet over all highways leading from the palatial six-acre Gettle estate,

Dedham Courthouse, May 10—A lengthy legal tilt over the introduction of Detective John Stokes' testimony regarding the story Murton Millen told in his presence to New York police took place this afternoon. Atty. Scharton objected to Stokes using a transcript of the interview to refresh his memory, but Judge Brown overruled Scharton.

Dedham Court House, May 10

The disclosure that a warning shouted by Abe Faber possibly saved himself and three state detectives from death in a dynamite blast was written into evidence at the Millen-Faber trial today as an epilogue to the last dramatic chapter of Faber's confession.

The police saved from possible death were State Detective Lieuts. Joseph Ferrari and Michael Fleming and Sergt. William Delay.

The incident occurred on February 20 at the garage in Brinsley st., Dorchester, where the guns used in the Needham Trust robbery and murders had been cached and to which Faber had led the officers.

Fleming picked up a bundle from the garage floor. It was wrapped in greasy newspaper. He began ripping the paper off.

"Look out for that! It's frozen dynamite!" Faber shouted. It was—208 sticks of it.

International News Service

Washington, May 10—President Roosevelt today signed the $417,000,000 "soak-the-thrifty" revenue bill, with members of House and Senate finance committees looking on.

The revenue measure carries new income tax schedules and a number of provisions designed to plug loopholes in present law.

Mr. Roosevelt was deeply disappointed at the provision placing the 2 per cent tax on cocoanut oil, but did not feel that this single feature justified veto.

Tax Bill Plugs Up "Loopholes" for Rich

By Associated Press

Washington, May 8—President Roosevelt added an estimated $175,000,000 today to the nation's annual revenue by signing into law the 1934 tax bill.

The act increased tax levies already amounting to $2,250,000,000 by strengthening existing law against evasion and adding new sources of income.

Plugging loopholes disclosed by the Senate Banking committee to be available to the wealthy was Congress' notice in writing the new law.

But before the bill went to the White House some rates were boosted and the income tax levies revamped.

The new law provides:

Heavier taxes on higher incomes, gifts, estate transfers, corporations and personal holding companies.

Repeal of the 8 per cent personal tax on individual net incomes above $4000 with surtaxes to start at $4000 instead of $6000.

A 2 cents a pound tax on Philippine cocoanut oil, the revenue to be returned to the island treasury.

DOLLFUSS BOMB PLOT FOILED

By Associated Press

Salzburg, Austria, May 10—Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss again narrowly escaped death today when authorities found a high explosive bomb at the airport station here shortly before he arrived from Vienna for a patriotic front meeting.

However, the little chancellor appeared unperturbed by the discovery.

He and Prince Ernst Von Starhemberg, the mandsome vice-chancellor and head of the Fascist Heimwehr, were showered with flowers by buxom peasant girls who swarmed around them in their procession through the streets of Salzburg.

It was the first joint appearances of the two men as leaders of a patriotic front demonstration.

Iceman's Plot on Wife Bared

Through the blackness of the Fellsway in Malden today, two Metropolitan policemen chased and captured two icemen after they are alleged to have attempted to place a young Malden mother in their ice truck in front of her home.

Arrival of the police, who went off their territory into Oakland st., at the Malden-Medford line, interrupted, two said, a struggle between the icemen and Mrs. Mary Hall, 28, mother of three children.

When Mrs. Hall was rescued she was covered with bruises from the pummeling she suffered and she was almost in hysterics.

In Malden court today, John J. Kavanaugh, 21, of Malden st., Malden, and Fred E. Maplesback, 24, of Sheridan ave., Medford, were held in $20,000 each for hearing Saturday on a charge of assault and battery, with felonious intent, on Mrs. Hall.

It was shortly after 2 a. m. when the officers were told by Andrew Fessenden of Hurlcroft ave., Medford, that an ice truck stood in front of the Oakland st. house and that a woman was being beaten.

SAMUEL INSULL REFUSED CUT IN RECORD BAIL OF $200,000

JUDGE SAYS MAGNATE NOT ENTITLED TO REDUCTION

Federal Attorney Tells Court He Will Show Frauds Involving One Hundred Million Dollars

By Associated Press

Chicago, May 10—Samuel Insull today was refused a reduction of the $200,000 bond under which he is held prisoner in Cook County Jail.

Judge Will M. Sparks of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals said he felt the evidence did not entitle the 74-year-old defendant to any lowering of the bond which Insull's attorney, Floyd E. Thompson, asserted was the highest ever demanded of a defendant in any United States court.

Insull, lounging in a wheel chair at the Cook County Jail, was not perturbed when Atty. Thompson and Insull's son, Samuel, Jr., told him of the judge's decision.

"You decide what to do," he said to his son. Young Insull and the attorney then began a conference over raising the necessary $200,000.

Thompson had brought his plea before Judge Sparks in a petition for a habeas corpus writ. Insull remained in the jail hospital, where he has rested since Judge John P. Barnes, Tuesday, fixed the bond on his charges of using the mails fraudulently and violating the bankruptcy act.

HUGE SUM INVOLVED

Forest A. Harness, special assistant attorney-general, told Judge Sparks the government would show that frauds involving 100 million dollars were committed in the mail fraud case and that two millions dollars was involved in the alleged mishandling of assets in anticipation of bankruptcy.

"The importance of these sums," Harness said, "entitles the government to assurance that Insull will be on hand for his trials."

Judge Sparks concluded the hearing with the remark:

"I do not see how any one could refuse you a hearing, but I am going to deny your application."

Thompson, a former chief justice of the Illinois Supreme Court, has told Judge Sparks that the erstwhile multimillionaire was wholly without property or funds and that to fix no great a sum for his bond was tantamount to denying him the right to bail.

SEARCHED COURT RECORDS

Thompson said he had searched the records of federal courts throughout the land and found that $132,000 was the largest bond ever asked. In Chicago, the record bond of $50,000 has been applied to several defendants, among them Al Capone, now imprisoned for dodging his income taxes.

"The highest bond on record in all federal courts," Thompson informed Judge Sparks, "was $100,000 required of a state treasurer of Nevada when he was indicted for embezzling a half million dollars. Bond of $25,000 is usually considered high in other cases."

$150,000 BAIL READY

Insull's son, Samuel, Jr., and his attorney had prepared to supply $100,000 bond if necessary, and said today they could raise the extra $50,000 the state demands on its indictments of embezzlement, but $200,000, they insisted, was beyond their power.

Nevertheless, refused any aid from Judge Sparks, Thompson said that two courses remained open. He may appeal the habeas corpus proceedings to the Circuit Court of Appeals, since Judge Sparks was sitting today as a judge of the district court, or he may seek to raise more funds.

Chicago, May 10 (INS)—"Scapegoat."

That was the contention of Samuel Insull today as he sat, pajama-clad in the office of Dr. Francis J. McNamara, physician at the Cook County Jail, and ventured a brief comment on his present predicament.

Insull was reading the newspapers.

"Now that the time is drawing close for a showdown and the real facts are to be brought out in the courtroom, there is a change in public sentiment," he remarked.

He suddenly checked himself. Then, with a strange mixture of humor and sarcasm, he said:

"I hold no illusions. There is no use crying about the whole matter.

"I have been made the scapegoat by the newspapers, who have poisoned the minds of the public in their fight for circulation."

Insull, when informed at the county jail that Judge Sparks had refused to reduce his bond, took the matter philosophically.

"Well," he said, puffing away at a cigar, "I have no comment to make on that.

"As a matter of fact I am enjoying myself here. I'm getting splendid treatment and have the best of medical attention.

"Why should I worry?"

B. U. Babies Start High-Browing Young

Even Albert Eugene Jenkins, of East Bridgewater, tries to read. Imagine an 11 months old youngster reading the Bible! But "when in Rome, do as the Romans do"; and Gene knew also that he was at the B. U. school of theology. Gene was selected the "most jovial" tot at the baby parade. That itself is worth a chuckle.

B. U. BABIES PUT "SHOW" OVER

Boston University babies showed their student parents just how a show should be run yesterday afternoon at the school of theology "Baby Show." Almost every baby won a prize, from "most tenacious" to "most vivacious."

Four-day-old Tommy Hedrick ran away with the show, figuratively speaking, by copping the "most dependent" title, despite the fact that the selection was made by proxy. Tommy just could not show up, he sent word.

But eight-weeks-old Tommy Wallace was there, and so indifferent was he to the exhibition that he was chosen "most peaceful." "Most tenacious" went to Johnny Brooks, who is 15 months old.

Albert Jenkins, 10½ months, was "most jovial"; Johnny Bellinger, 22 months, "most athletic"; Robby Greene, 3 years old, "most vigorous"; Ruthy McGlason, 4½ months, "most penetrating eyes"; Carolyn Kelly, 19 months, "most philosophical"; Nancy Bowman, 9 months, "most friendly"; Mary Sandsted, 2 years, "most vivacious"; and Mary Reeves, 22 months, "most adventurous."

Father, 2 Girls Die in Rhode Island Blaze

Providence, R. I., May 10 (AP)—A father and two of his young daughters—one of whom rescued her infant brother and then perished in a vain attempt to save her younger sister—were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their isolated farmhouse in the town of Richmond today.

The mother, who carried one of the other children to safety, the oldest daughter, and th infant boy, tossed out of the window by his nine-year-old sister, who lafr lost her life, had a narrow escape from death in the flames which razed the house.

The dead: Philip Moore 33; Frances Genevieve Moore, 9; Phyllis Moore, 7.

Frances Genviev, known as Geneva, had escaped from the flaming house after throwing her 18-month-old brother, Harold, out of the window, but went back to the house to rescue Phyllis and was trapped in the flames. She was clasping her sister's charred body in her arms when found in the ruins.

Mrs. Catherine Moore, 30, carried Philip E. Jr., 4, to safety. She and Philip were later taken to the South County Hospital in Wakefield. Mary Helen, 11, was able to leave the house without help.

As the girl rushed out of the house, she picked up her little brother where he had fallen when tossed out from the window and brought him down the road to her mother.

"Daddy and Phyllis are still in there," she told her mother. "I'm going after them."

The terrified mother screamed a warning, trying to dissuade the child from risking her life, but Frances Genevieve, undaunted, rushed into the flaming house to meet her fate.

Her blackened arms were wound about the body of Phyllis when firemen found her hours later.

WARREN FIGHTS NEW JUDGE BILL

Senator Charles C. Warren of Arlington today served notice that if the Senate ways and means committee reports favorably on the bill passed by the House creating an additional probate judge for Suffolk County, he would go into the "political end" of the proposed legislation.

It is current report in the State House corridors that if the bill is passed, Commissioner of Correction Frederick J. Dillon, former assistant secretary to Gov. Ely, will get the post.

Senator Warren declared there is no need for another judge, and that the $9000 extra cost is unjustified.

SHAKEUP STORY STIRS POLICE

Rumors of a tremendous shakeup of the Boston police department, affecting every one of the police districts, were current in Boston police headquarters today.

The rumor, denied by Police Commissioner Eugene C. Hultman, is the result of a questionnaire sent out by Supt. Martin H. King to the commanders of all divisions, asking for a list of all men they desired transferred from their respective divisions.

It was also learned that Commissioner Hultman is making preparation for the promotion of several higher officers, but that he has delayed on making any announcement on planned promotions because of a disagreement between civil service officials and himself over the system of selecting candidates for promotion.

A Correction

Through an error this newspaper ran an advertisement which stated that grocers were now making a special offer of a small trial package of Rippled Wheat Breakfast Food free with the standard big-size package.

This was an old advertisement which we inserted by mistake.

Although the manufacturers say they would be glad to renew this offer, it cannot be done on such short notice as the small trial packages are not now in the hands of the grocers.

The big-size package of Rippled Wheat, the new breakfast food sensation, with 28 servings, is available at your grocers and selling in increasing quantities ever since this first trial offer was made. Have you tried it yet?

NRA READY TO QUIT LITTLE BUSINESSES

Officials Wearied of Policing in Petty Code Disputes

By Associated Press

Washington, May 10—An early abandonment of attempts to supervise every little business in the land was definitely indicated today at NRA.

Badgered and burdened with petty code differences, Hugh S. Johnson's chief aids are studying the ground for retreat along this line. In guarded utterances, officials admit a definite reaction against wholesale code writing and policing. They foresee some difficulty, however, in extricating themselves.

Almost unanimously, they want to quit supervising strictly local service trades, such as pressing shops, barbers and boothblack. An increasing number of officials want to junk complicated price maintenance and cost-finding provisions, which are giving trouble in many codes.

Two things, however, stand in the way: First, trade association groups which demanded and obtained codes so as to extend their influences over unorganized competition, are fighting hard to hold this ground.

Officials believe the two obstacles may prevent doing what many would prefer, which is to tear up what some call the "nuisance" codes and forget them.

They are, therefore, promoting the idea of letting all service establishments which want to comply with wage and hour terms so as to display the blue eagle do so. Then if the bulk of service establishments in any one city insist on a local code they may have one.

But the NRA will not urge it on them.

The Real Question

By ROBERT H. HEMPHILL
Financial Authority

The central purpose of the silver legislation now holding the spotlight of interest in Washington is to restore the prices of 1926 by increasing the monetary base and the VOLUME OF CURRENCY IN CIRCULATION.

THIS IS THE REAL DOMESTIC ISSUE.

The advocates or opponents will talk about silver, but beneath the technicalities will be the desire either to restore prosperity to this nation or to delay our recovery.

A decided majority of both houses of Congress is in favor of effective silver remonetization and the issuance and distribution of the certificates.

People Believe More Cash Will Increase Prosperity

They firmly believe more money in circulation will increase our prosperity, and this view is held by every sound economist, scientist and philosopher of ancient or modern times.

True or not, however, the majority of citizens of this country believes it, and we are supposed to have a government of and by the people.

Against this majority sentiment is a small but well defined, compact and powerful opposition determined at any cost either to defeat this legislation or to render it ineffective by some clever device.

This opposition is unquestionably directed by the English central banking group, which is determined to retain control of world monetary affairs, which effective remonetization of silver would unquestionably upset.

International Money Group Oppose Wishes of Citizens

THIS IS THE INTERNATIONAL ISSUE.

The significant question involved is whether the influence or propoganda of a powerful international group can control the policy of this nation against well defined desire and judgment of a majority of our citizens.

It has done so in the past. It may do so again.

12 ARE INJURED IN WAVE OF ACCIDENTS

South End, Brighton Scenes of Slippery Street Mishaps

Slippery streets and early morning darkness combined as causes today in a series of accidents in Jamaica Plain, South End and Brighton, and one woman was killed while 12 other persons were injured, some seriously.

Mrs. Mary McGrath, 50, of Washington st., Jamaica Plain, was fatally injured after she had alighted from the machine of Joseph Bettencourt of Boylston st., also Jamaica Plain.

Bettencourt, thinking she was safe on the sidewalk, backed up just as Mrs. McGrath was crossing in the rear of the car. She was pinioned to the ground, and died at City Hospital.

Six persons, including a 19-months-old baby, were hurt in North Beacon st., Brighton, when an Elevated bus crashed into a parked auto. They were taken to St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

The casualties: Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah Wholey, of Crest Hill rd., Brighton, and their baby, Cornelius; James Sullivan, of Brooks st., Brighton; Arthur Seinicariello and James Pesnecachio, both of White st., Waverley. Pesnecachio and Jeremiah Wholey had broken bones.

At Shawmut ave. and West Concord st., West End, Miss Edith Harris, 22, a graduate nurse, received injuries that may prove fatal.

She was riding in a taxicab operated by Daniel Duggan, of Hamilton st., Dorchester. A large sedan crashed into it with such force that the sedan was overturned, two wheels torn off and its four occupants pinned underneath.

Duggan was hurt less seriously than his passenger. Kenneth Bunker, 22, of Hillside ave., Arlington, was driver of the sedan; the passengers were: Omer Renaut, of St. Botolph st., Back Bay; Kenneth Bloomerth of Summer st., Malden, and Thomas Heffernan, of Waterbury, Ct. All went to City Hospital.

BURNS IS READY TO RUN FOR GOVERNOR

Judge Will Accept Nomination if Ely Refuses

Judge John J. Burns, youngest member of the Superior Court bench, will accept nomination for governor on the Democratic ticket in the event that Gov. Ely declines to run again, the jurist said today in his home in Belmont.

A movement to place Judge Burns, recognized as one of the keenest legal minds in New England, in nomination at the Democratic State Convention next month, has been growing steadily in the past few weeks.

Until his statement today to the Boston Evening American, however, he had given no indication publicly one way or the other as to his intentions.

"Gov. Ely," said the jurist, "is a very good friend of mine, and I consider that he has made an excellent governor. I would not consider opposing Gov. Ely if he decides to run again.

"If he does not run, however, and I am nominated by the convention, I will be very glad to put up a good fight for the office."

Judge Burns is only 33 years old. He is a graduate of Boston College and Harvard Law School and was a professor at the law school when appointed to the bench three years ago at the age of 30. He lives at 21 Chiremont rd., Belmont. His father was a Boston Elevated motorman.

Other known candidates for the Democratic nomination, for whom workers are declared to be active, are former Mayor Curley and Brig.-Gen. Charles H. Cole. Neither has publicly avowed himself a candidate.

POLA NEGRI TO PRESS PARIS ART SUIT

BY WILLIAM PARKER

Paris, May 10 (INS)—Poignant echoes of an historic romance in the film world were heard in Paris today as opposing lawyers prepared for a court battle over the price of a painting of Pola Negri which has in its misty background a ghostlike figure of Rudolph Valentino.

Valentino succeeded Charlie Chaplin in the affections of Miss Negri, and when Valentino died August 23, 1926, in New York, Miss Negri appeared at the funeral in deep mourning. They were engaged to be married, she revealed.

Some time later, in Hollywood, Miss Negri was introduced to Beltram y Masses, famous Spanish painter. It was at the home of a cinema star in Beverly Hills, and Masses told Miss Negri he would like to paint her picture. Miss Negri felt quite flattered and sat for him in Paris in 1931.

When the painting was completed Miss Negri was, according to her allegations, somewhat startled to observe the shadowy form of Valentino in the background of the portrait. She had just divorced Prince Serge Mdivani.

But Miss Negri was even more startled when painter Masses casually mentioned that there was a trifling sum of $5000 due from Miss Negri.

"For painting your picture," replied Masses.

"But I thought it was a compliment," objected the actress.

Masses then sued Miss Negri and the case has dragged along ever since. Now Miss Negri's lawyer has decided that instead of the actress owing the painter any money, the painter owes the actress money. So Miss Negri filed a counter-action for 100,000 francs.

ROOSEVELT SON OUT OF JOB

Partnership of James Roosevelt, son of the president, John A. Sargent, and Douglas Lawson in an insurance business on Water st., was dissolved today.

Announcement of the dissolution of the partnership was made officially in legal notices in the newspapers, and confirmed by Lawson, who stated business reasons caused the move.

Discussing the matter today Lawson said:

"We put together the partnership in February of last year, but after a little more than a year we mutually agreed that the partnership should be dissolved. It just did not work out as we had hoped."

SPECS NUDIST'S SOLE ATTIRE

Many are the strange sights to be seen periodically on a walk downtown from the North Station, but first place was given today to the rush hour sight of a nude man lolling in a doorway—tastefully arrayed in a pair of glasses.

Commuters headed for their offices received a shock when they glanced at the doorway and saw what appeared to be a bedroom mirage. It appeared to be a man with glasses but without clothes.

They shook their heads, looked away and then looked back again, to be certain. It still appeared to be a man with glasses but no clothes. Then police were called.

At Haymarket Relief hospital, the man, apparently an amnesia victim, said he thought he was Daniel Curran or Cullen, about 30 years old, and that he believed he was an optician.

If you are looking for a furnished or unfurnished home or apartment or room let Barbara Holmes do your worrying for you. You'll find her every day at R. H. White Co., from 9 a. m. to 5:30 p. m.

STORE MAGNATE IS KIDNAPED

friends and business acquaintances gathered at the Gettle home to await a note or phone call from the abductors, so that negotiations for a possible ransom might be started without delay.

Summoned from nearby Azuss, Walter Girden, Gettle's brother-in-law, said that he was "ready to deal with the kidnapers."

Federal Department of Justice agents entered the case a few hours after Gettle was reported kidnaped.

Wolf, tied to a tree, watched as the kidnapers lifted Gettle to the top of an eight-foot stone wall which surrounds the six-acre estate.

Gettle rolled off outside the wall and groaned, Wolf said.

While they were being marched at pistols' points from the summer house toward the wall Wolf said that he dicopped his wallet containing $200.

Gettle said to the kidnapers, according to Wolff:

"I'll give you all the money I have on me and go in the house for more if you won't take me away."

Wolf said that the kidnapers laughed and replied:

Wolf said that he was commanded not to try to break his bonds and give the alarm for at least an hour.

"Squawk an alarm in less than an hour and we'll kill you," Wolf said the kidnapers told him.

Gettle recently retired as executive of a chain store group and was understood to have become affiliated with a firm of brokers. Only a short time ago he purchased the estate from which he was abducted.

Gettle has a wife and four children. Mrs. Gettle collapsed after the kidnaping and was under the care of a physician.

CHEAP MILK IS LA GUARDIA AIM

By Associated Press

New York, May 10—Bulk milk at 15 cents for two quarts is Mayor LaGuardia's aim, he said today.

During the price dispute between the mayor and the state milk authorities, the mayor frequently declared that lower prices would operate to the farmers' benefit in stimulating the consumption of the fluid.

Mayor LaGuardia said there was no reason why clean, pure milk could not be retailed as loose milk.

Pay Raise Hope Fades in House

Hopes of a pay raise had gone glimmering, as far as members of the Boston licensing board were concerned today. It took only a vote in the House to kill the raise measure that had been passed by the Senate earlier in the week. There was practically no debate before the vote and there is little chance of resurrecting the bill, it was said.

Miss Solvason's husband, Frederick Hessert, from whom she had been separated six years, said:

Schools Morbidly Prolong Youth, Asserts Doctor

By Associated Press

New York, May 10—A morbid effort to prolong youth was charged against educators today, by Dr. Howard W. Haggard, of Yale University.

His generalization was a part of an address at a mother's day luncheon, sponsored by the Maternity Center Association, an address in which he deplored what he called the "needless" deaths last year of 10,000 women in childbirth.

The failure of the schools to prepare children for parentage he called "prudery to be paid for in a coin of suffering."

"Boys and girls are taught to read and write in order to vote for the men who make our laws," he said. "They are taught history and arithmetic and civic and literature; girls have had instruction in art and music and boys in mechanics, yet few will follow these vocations. Parentage, something that nearly all of them will take part in, re-

TOURISTS 'SEE' EAST BOSTON TUNNEL IN 3 MINUTES

Highway Experts Clocked in Trip in New Under Harbor Path, But Time Can Be Clipped Minute

Three minutes from Faneuil Hall to Porter st., East Boston. Impossible?

Not at all, if you use the new $19,000,000 East Boston tunnel, under Boston harbor, as members of the Massachusetts Highway Association did today.

About 200 of them gathered at Hanover and Cross sts., the Boston approach to the 6400-feet (a mile and a fifth) tube, with their cars, and were taken through on an inspection tour by Col. Thomas F. Sullivan, chairman of the transit commission, who is in charge of the city's new time-saving tunnel.

CARS CLOCKED IN RUN

Not counting the time during which the motorcade was halted midway to examine structural details, the average time of the trip for each car was a little more than 3 minutes.

Leaving the inspection party in East Boston, a Boston Evening American reporter and a photographer nosed their car back into the tunnel mouth. Without the handicap of leading a procession, they were able to drive from entrance to entrance in a few seconds less than 2 minutes!

It will be the first of June—perhaps first of July—before the public will be able to head its cars past the Georgian red brick tunnel administration building, under the city printing office and on to East Boston.

But when all the finishing touches are completed, the driver looking for a short cut to the North Shore will find a 21-foot, white-tiled, two-lane roadway stretching in front of him between white-tiled walls. Two six-inch stripes of yellow paint separate the east-bound from the west-bound traffic.

WIDTH FOR TWO CARS

The driver will find the new tube considerably narrower than the four-lane Holland tube that leads from New York to Newark. He'll find it narrower, too, than the two-lane tunnel that connects Detroit with tiny Windsor, Ont.

However, there is ample width for two cars to pass without difficulty. Arrangements have been made to remove quickly any car that may break down that traffic will not be delayed for more than a minute or two. Traffic in the lane ahead of the stalled car will clear the tunnel entrance. Then a tow car will rush in and bring out the disabled car.

So confident of its popularity were the men who planned the East Boston tube that they deliberately chose to build only a two-lane tunnel. Traffic using the short cut will soon justify the construction of a second tube, they feel. Then each of the tunnels will be a one-way affair.

Today the tunnel is a dusty stretch, full of workmen fitting white tiles or stretching copper cables for its signal system.

BIG FRESH AIR PUMPS

The illumination and ventilation systems are already in operation. When the tunnel is opened for general use there will be 28 great fans in operation in the two ventilator buildings on the East Boston end, with a capacity of 1,200,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute.

This air stream will be forced into the tube and dead air and carbon monoxide fumes will be sucked out.

Also out of sight is an elaborate drainage system.

The shell consists of three feet of steel and concrete, and is built straight as an arrow.

The down grade on the Boston end is 4.2 per cent, and 3.4 per cent at East Boston. The bottom of the tube is 100 feet beneath mean high water and 50 feet beneath the harbor bottom.

Col. Sullivan today told the highway association members about all these engineering details and many more, as they took their ride.

When swarms of buffalo gnats attacked cattle in the West recently, killing horses, mules and cattle, it was suggested here that the government or some big oil company might attack the swarms of insect life, spraying crude oil or some other substance, under pressure, from airplanes.

The nation might well add that to its many other experiments, especially as it would cost nothing. For some reason, this country seems afraid to deal with Aviation on its own account.

The British are not thus handicapped, and following government experiments in Rhodesia the British Royal Air force will fight the locust swarms throughout South Africa, spraying them with finely ground sodium arsenate from the air.

The President might ask our little subdivided national air force to develop initiative and try to help the farmer with his gnats, locusts, grasshoppers and tree pests. The locusts are expected soon, in some place.

Young French "royalists," who like to think themselves descendants of the nobility, when more than 90 per cent of them are not, and call themselves "king's henchmen," recently distinguished themselves by attacking a woman, the well-known Madame Caillaux, driving her from a speaker's platform.

Such were not the manners of French kings. Louis XIV, arrogant, locusts, incompetent, was not much to brag about. But when he met the humblest scrubwoman in his palace, he would remove his hat and bow, because she was a woman.

SCHOOL VOTE FIGHT GROWS

In an unexpected move which startled Cambridge today, a group of 14 Cambridge citizens took the battle on the school department budget to the Supreme Court to restrain the city of Cambridge from what they maintain is an illegal expenditure of money on the special election slated for next Tuesday on the ground that it is "illegal and unconstitutional."

Former Atty. Gen. Herbert Parker, counsel for the group of citizens, appeared in the Middlesex Superior Court today and filed the petition seeking a restraining order on the City Council from binding the city on the special election.

The restraining order was sent to the clerk of the Supreme Court in Boston.

The claim that the special election called by the city council is illegal puts an entirely new aspect on the whole battle.

Cedar City, Utah, May 10 (AP)—Suffering from wounds and exposure, Sheriff Lewis R. Fife, related today how he had used a rock to free himself from a tree to which he had been handcuffed by a man and a woman.

BANDIT DILLINGER DEAD, POLICE BELIEVE

By International News Service

Chicago, May 10—John Dillinger, Indiana fugitive, was believed by many police officials here to be dead or dying today in some remote hideout, as the manhunt reached a virtual standstill.

After two weeks' search, police and federal agents had run out all clues to the fugitive's whereabouts. They were inclined to believe that he received the bullet which seriously wounded someone when deputy sheriffs fired on the stolen automobile in which Dillinger and two of his henchmen were escaping from Little Bohemia Lodge April 23.

Officers said Dillinger has not been seen since April 23, when he was identified at South St. Paul.

Columbus, O., May 10—John Dillinger or some of his henchmen may or may not be in Ohio, but—

Dark figures bearing "Tommy" guns moved quietly about the executive mansion. The muzzle of a high-powered rifle gleamed from a garage window.

An automobile swept into the driveway, and out stepped Gov. George White and his daughter, Mary, recently the target of kidnap notes demanding the release of three Dillinger gangsters from the Ohio penitentiary.

Cleveland, May 10—Three members of John Dillinger's gang today were reported touring northern Ohio roads in a sedan.

They were Homer Van Meter, machine gunner for the outlaw, John Hamilton and George (Baby Face) Nelson. Marshal Ray Bechtel, of North Canton, reported seeing the car containing the men on the Canton-Cleveland road.

Bandits Bind 11, Flee With $2500

Philadelphia, May 10 (AP)—Three robbers entered the office of the Household Finance Corporation today, bound the hands and feet of seven employes and four patrons, and escaped with $2500.

Wearing colored glasses, and with pistols in hand, they forced the 11 persons there to crowd behind a railing. While one kept the prisoners covered with his pistol, another two produced rope from their pockets and bound them.

JUNE 'KIDNAPS' SEND ANOTHER RANSOM NOTE

By Associated Press

Tucson, Ariz., May 10—Search for the kidnapers of June Robles, six-year-old heiress, swung back into Arizona today following receipt of a second ransom note the victim's family considered probably authentic.

Authorities believed delivery of the second note indicated the presence in or near here of one of the abductors in addition to the self-styled contact man now detained.

An airplane was pressed into service by Oliver White, chief criminal deputy of Santa Cruz county, and two United States customs guards for a trip to Ajo, Ariz., 120 miles west of here. They carried a shovel, but declined to say why.

Earlier the three had made a secret motor car trip from Nogales.

A search by Mexican authorities and cowboys in the wilds about Cananea, Sonora, for three persons, and a girl resembling the kidnap victim, led to belief the party had left that vicinity. The suspects, an American and a Mexican couple, were seen in Cananea a few hours before officers arrived to look for them.

The second ransom note was understood to have been accepted by the girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fernando Robles, and her grandfather, Barnabe Robles, as assurance that she was still alive. It was said to have advised that plans for delivery of the $15,000 as contained in the original note were to be followed.

WIFE BAILED ON KILLING CHARGE

Charged with the murder of her husband, Mrs. Ruth Ingalls, 35, 125 Park drive, Back Bay, pleaded not guilty before Judge Albert F. Hayden in Roxbury district court today, and was released on $5000 bail to await grand jury hearing.

Lieut. DiSessa and defense counsel joined the court in a bench conference in which it was stated that the husband was cut after "some fooling remarks" made to his wife, when he slipped on the floor and fell on the knife.

According to police, both husband and wife said it was an accident, but Ingalls said he held the knife, while the wife said she did.

The $5000 bail was furnished by Horace Goodrich, West Concord, father of the defendant.

"To cultivate and reinforce this public sentiment, all social agencies must play their part."

Heaviest responsibility was on the bar, he said.

MILLEN JURY TOLD HOW CRIME WAS SOLVED BY '3 ACES'

PUZZLED OVER ROSE'S GIFT AND ARREST

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

Dedham Courthouse, May 10—The state's "Three Aces"—Detectives Ferrari, Fleming and Stokes—held the center of the spotlight today as the government pushed on to a close of its case against Abe Faber and the Millen brothers for murder and robbery at the Needham Trust Co.

Ferrari completed his recital of a confession he said he obtained from Abe Faber. He told of informing Abe of Rose Kneilar's arrest. The others told of taking part in the hunt for the killers.

The surprise of the day was the short cross-examination of Ferrari by Atty. William R. Scharton, counsel for Faber.

Ferrari Told Abe Of Rose's Arrest

Court opened at 10:42 with State Detective Joseph Ferrari recalled to the stand for questioning by Dist. Atty. Dewing.

Q—After the conference on the 26th which you testified to yesterday, did you later have a conversation with Faber? A—Yes, but not in relation to this case.

Q—Did you talk to him at a later date about this case? A—Yes, on March 3 at the Dedham jail.

Q—Who was present? A—Only Faber and myself.

Q—What was the conversation? Atty. Scharton asked that his original exception be saved in this instance and it was. A—I went to the Dedham jail and said to Faber: "Did you know what happened last night?" He said, "No, what?"

I said, "Rose was arrested."

He said, "What for?" I said, "She turned over to two lawyers $3500 and some odd dollars." He said, "What did she do that for?"

I said, "I don't know. Did you give her that money?"

He said "Yes."

I said, "Was it done up in a bundle?"

He said, "Yes."

I said, "When did you give it to her?"

He said, "I gave it to her two days after the robbery."

I said, "Did you have any talk with her when you gave her the bundle?"

He said "Yes, when I gave her the bundle I told her to put it away and not to look into it until we were married."

Dist. Atty. Dewing asked Ferrari to identify Faber's signature on the confession, which he did, and then Dewing offered it.

Abe's Confession Kept Out of Exhibits

Atty. Scharton objected. Atty. Harvey also objected, Harvey stating: "I havn't even had an opportunity to examine it." He asked the court to postpone actual admission of the document for a week until he had time to examine it.

Atty. Scharton interrupted with another objection on the grounds that the actual appearance of the document before the jurors would be prejudicial. He said: "The jurors should be allowed to rely on their memories. Having this document in the jurysroom might possibly prejudice the jurors to render a verdict based solely on the document."

Judge Brown announced the document could be marked for identification only for the time being.

Q—Prior to joining the state police you were a member of the Boston police force? A—Yes.

Q—As a special officer you had a free hand in the apprehension of criminals at any time, day or night and familiarized yourself with the person and manner of criminals? A—Yes.

Q—From your experience you have formed an expert opinion in relation to the characteristics of a person who commits crime? A—I don't want to say that.

"Perhaps you are too modest," Scharton said. "I'll reframe the question."

Q—You have made a great many arrests including for major crimes, murder, arson, burglary and larceny? A—Yes.

Abe Did Not Smile In His Confession

Q—You have obtained confessions from criminals without undue force? A—Yes.

Q—You are more or less familiar with the manner in which a confession is made by a criminal? A—Yes.

Q—Altogether you have been a police officer for 26 years? A—Yes.

Q—You have figured in a great many important cases? A—Quite a few.

"I'll admit that you are a good detective," Scharton said.

Q—You have a fair knowledge of the type of person who commits crime? A—I have a fair knowledge.

Q—When this Needham case—we will call it a murder to use plain English—happened you and Mr. Stokes were sent to investigate it? A—Yes.

Q—All that he said to you in these interviews you found later to be true, whether or not it implicated himself? A—I'd say yes.

Q—He replied to your questions in a free and casual way? A—Yes.

Q—He smiled during the interviews? A—I wouldn't say he smiled.

Q—He was carefree? A—I don't want to say he was carefree, he was quiet.

Q—You say the only time he showed a little agitation was when you questioned him about the letter in reference to P. G.? A—He said he wanted to talk to his lawyer.

Q—You said to him that it would be much better if he would tell you and he told you that he didn't know what it meant, but you had made up your mind before you saw and talked with him what it meant. You said P. G. meant police gun? A—Yes.

Q—There are no secrets between you and John Stokes? A—No.

Q—Finally when you translated part of that letter into good English he said "Yes"? A—Yes.

Q—Then you said, "Where is the place?" and he said that he would draw you a diagram because he didn't want to go, that somebody might see him? A—Yes.

"Abe Did Not Evade Questions of Crime"

Q—You asked him to come along, and he went. You didn't have to coax him? A—No.

Q—At no time was he evasive or show any other inclination than to answer all your questions? A—That's right.

The detective said that Faber slept at the State House when they took him there to be questioned and that he (Ferrari) obtained for him a mattress and a cot.

Q—Now when you talked with him you said, "Now come across, Abe?" A—I didn't say anything like that. I asked him if he'd make a full statement concerning the Needham case and he said he would.

Q—Did you make any statement to him about helping him, if he told y"u his story? A—No.

Q—Well, you knew there was something in the newspapers that Faber had been told to get aboard the bandwagon? A—I didn't know anything about it and the newspapers didn't get it from me.

Q—Did you say you would help him? A—No.

Q—You know that the promise of help would affect the confession? A—I know it was not allowed.

Q—Do you have that in mind now? A—I always had it in mind.

Q—Did you make this preamble to Faber when you talked with him: "Now, Abe, whatever you say will be used for or against you." A—I never use that. I ask them if they want to talk. If they say no, I don't bother about it.

"You Knew Confession Meant Electric Chair?"

Q—And he told you just what you recited to this jury yesterday? A—Yes.

Q—You realize that the confession meant, if he were of sane mind, evidence that would send him to the electric chair? A—I don't know what may be done with it.

Q—But you know if he were of sane mind, if he were telling the truth, that he would go to the electric chair? A—I don't know.

Q—And even in the investigation of this first-degree murder, you found Faber's recital of his participation cool, calm, collected and without any visible evidence of any hesitation to tell you the whole story. A—(After saying he would have to explain, but being pinned by Scharton to a "yes" or "no" reply, Ferrari answered): I'll have to say yes.

Dist. Atty. Dewing questioned on re-direct.

Q—What was his demeanor? ... His demeanor was standing in the garage at the time, nearest the door."

Q—On the following day did you have some conversation with Faber during which something was said about the mask? A—I did.

Q—What was said? Scharton objected, Judge Brown turned to the jury and explained his objection. He said the objection was made on the grounds that Scharton's client was mentally incompetent and was not responsible for any statements he made to Lieut. Fleming or any other officers.

Mask Abe Wore Is In Evidence

"Later in the course of this trial I will instruct you as to the law so you may be guided when you take the case under consideration," Judge Brown said.

Fleming answered:

"I said, 'Did you wear a mask that day?' and he said, 'Yes.' I asked him if Irving or Murion were masks and he said he wasn't sure about Murton, but Irving didn't wear one. I asked him what color his mask was, and he said 'Black.' I asked him how it was fastened and he said 'with elastics.' I asked him where the mask was and he said, 'You have it.' I asked him if it was the mask he saw me pick up in the garage and he said 'Yes.'"

(Scharton objected and the court instructed the prosecutor to ask the witness if he wished to add anything further. He reframed the question and the state detective answered.) A—The only thing I can add is that when he made that statement, he put his head in his hand and laying it on the table said something in relation to his mother and father.

Q—What did he say? A—He said he was sorry for them.

Scharton re-cross-examined Lt. Ferrari.

Q—You have known in your experience of a person charged with crime making an attempt to escape? (Dewing objected, but the question was admitted.) A—I don't know. I never saw it.

Q—So far as Faber is concerned he at no time showed any desire to escape or get out? A—No.

Q—The only grief he showed was for his mother and father, and not for himself? A—Yes.

Lt. Fleming Tells Of Finding Guns

Lt. Ferrari was excused from the witness stand.

Lt. Michael F. Fleming, state police officer attached to Dist. Atty. Dewing's office, was the next witness. He was taken under direct examination by First Assistant Dist. Atty. George W. Arbuckle, who is a former police office. He has been in constant attendance in the courtroom but until today had taken no active part in the questioning.

Lt. Fleming said that he was assigned to investigate the Needham bank robbery and murders on Feb. 2. He went to the garage in Brinsley st. on Feb. 25 with Lt. Ferrari and Faber.

"We broke into the garage and found the shot guns and other articles there," Lt. Fleming said.

He identified the shot guns and the other articles which had been marked for identification yesterday.

Q—Did you have any conversation with the defendant Faber while you were at the garage? A—Yes while we were inside the garage.

Q—What was the conversation? Scharton objected, but the witness was allowed to answer.

"Faber said to me: 'Look out for that, that's frozen dynamite. It's dangerous.'

"I saw a box in the garage and alongside of it was a bundle of newspapers, greasy in appearance. I started to take the paper off when Faber made the remark.

The Travel Dollar

It's a Fact

Europe still gives you more for your money than any trip you could make. Low prices more than offset any difference in exchange. Living and travel costs are down, prices that affect tourists most are being still further reduced to compensate for any alteration in exchange rates . . . . .

Reductions of 20% to 50% in railroad fares have already been announced. In Great Britain prices are not only low, but the exchange rate stands almost at par. You don't want to know how much a lira is but how much twin fare you have to pay from Naples to Rome . . . not how much a pound is, but how much a room and bath costs in England. And if you add together all those real items, the total cost of a trip to Europe will be still less than living and traveling on any comparable scale anywhere in the world!

Prices throughout Europe are so consistently low that exchanges would have to climb very much higher to offset the present advantage. Steamship passage is the first and biggest item . . . and the dollar buys more Trans-Atlantic comfort and luxury in Cunard and Anchor ships today than it could buy in many years past. At these low 1934 rates a second trip to Europe stands out as the biggest value offered in many years past. Take 1926, the year now adopted as the "year of normalcy", and the comparison of steamship rates is amazing. Why, the average minimum First Class rate is down 20%. And so much additional space and comfort and even entire ships, have been given over to Cabin and Tourist Classes that 1926 had no values with which we can compare.

OLD-FASHIONED ALE is Different

The mellow ale of olden days was the accepted drink in home and tavern—the hearty, healthful drink of rich and poor alike.

. . . so different that Croft has become, in a few months, the most popular ale in New England

THERE'S not a drop of disillusionment in a whole barrel of Croft Ale.

For Croft lives up to every tradition of mellowness and hearty vigor that is the inheritance of sound ale—the goodness that has made old-fashioned ale celebrated in song and story.

Fully aged, made by methods that centuries have proved to be correct, Croft Ale in a few short months has become New England's most popular ale.

The reasons for this are not hard to understand.

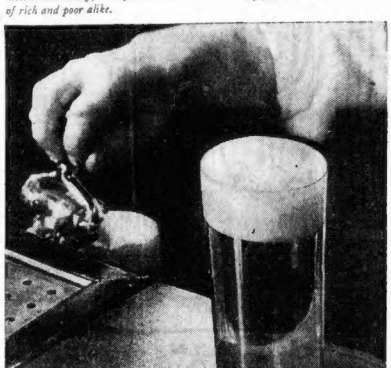
When their taste told them that in Croft they were getting a full-strength, full-bodied, vigorous, old-fashioned ale, they naturally made it their own.

You will easily recognize the difference when you taste Croft for the first time and relish the real mellowness, flavor, and strength that only time-tested methods and "old-fashioned" purity of ingredients can produce.



The popularity of Croft Ale brewed in the old tradition proved that a hale, hearty, vigorous drink is appreciated today as in olden times.

FABER COOL AS HE 'PUT SELF IN CHAIR,' JURY IS TOLD

ABE'S DYNAMITE CRY SAVED ALL FROM DEATH

Mask. He also identified the confession which he said Faber signed in his presence. He was then taken under cross-examination by Atty. Scharton.

"Michael, you and I have been pals for a great many years," Scharton began. "You are not holding it against Faber for that warning he gave you about the dynamite, are you?"

"If he hadn't warned you you might not have been here now to testify," Scharton stated.

"Thats' right," Fleming replied.

"That's one favor Faber did," Scharton said.

Scharton then produced the black mask and asked Fleming to put it on. Fleming smiled and refused.

"Now, dont you get excited," Scharton said to the assistant prosecutor.

Q—When you were talking with him, Michael, he was perfectly calm wasn't he? A—I wouldn't say so.

Q—He sat there peacefully? A—He sat there.

"Now Michael, don't try to be a hundred per cent policeman, Scharton chided.

"I object to that remark," Dewing said. "You ask him the questions and he will answer them."

"Don't get excited, Michael and I understand each other," Scharton replied.

Q—He sat there calmly? A—He looked discouraged.

Q—He told the truth? A—As far as I know.

Q—He answered freely? A—Yes.

Q—There was nothing discouraging about that? A—No.

Q—You didn't try to stop him? A—No.

Lt. Stokes Tells of Tracing Battery

Lieut. John F. Stokes was the next witness called to the stand. It was his second appearance on the witness stand. Previously he testified during the battle the defense made to keep Faber's confession from reaching the jury.

Under questioning by Asst. Dist. Atty. Arbuckle, Stokes began his recital of the part he played in bringing the prisoners to the bar.

"I went to the Needham Trust Co. on February 6 with Lieut. Ferreri. I met Lieut. Fleming there and talked with Boston police and Chief Bliss, and I talked with Mr. Riordan, Mr. MacIntosh and other bank employes.

"On February 7, on receipt of a telephone call from the Norwood police department, I went to Norwood and observed an automobile on Lily Pond rd. On February 8 I had a talk with Mr. Mills in reference to a battery found in the car. Later that day I talked with Mr. Mills.

"On February 9 I talked with Sergts. Delaney and Canavan relative to the battery. On February 10 I talked with the same officers again about the battery. I dictated a teletype message relative to the battery and some keys, which I had released to the press.

"On Feb. 12 I had a conversation with Albert Levierge and his brother at the State House relative to the battery and after his examination of the battery I turned it over to Sergt. Crecio. I went to Needham on the night of the 12th and met Mr. Corcoran of the Packard Motor Company. Mr. Corcoran had a suppressor which he had taken from the Packard car.

"Then We Went To Abe Faber's Place"

"On Feb. 13, I dictated a teletype alarm relative to Irving and Murton Millen and released the same dictation to the press."

Q—Where did you go then? A—Fleming and I went to Faber's place. We found that Ferrari had been there before us and talked with Faber about Lynch suppressors.

Lt. Stokes said that he could not remember that he talked about the bank robbery expressly. He said that he said nothing in reference to the purpose of his visit to Faber.

Q—On Feb. 15 did you do something further in connection with the investigation? A—Yes, another police alarm was sent out relative to the whereabouts of Murton and Irving Millen, about certain information in relation to addresses.

Q—On Feb. 16 did you go to 1175 Boylston st.? A—Yes I went to 1175 Boylston st., the apartment of Murton Millen.

Q—Who went with you? A—Fleming and Ferrari.

Q—Did you find anything there? A—Yes, a brown overcoat.

Q—On Feb. 21 did you go somewhere? A—I went to the Dorchester district court.

Harvey objected and Stokes was told to answer the question yes or no. He answered "yes." Atty. Scharton objected. The court said he did not see how this line of examination was competent.

Fight Over Search Warrant In Vain

"It seems to me to be waste of time," said Judge Brown.

Q—As a result of securing that search warrant . . .

"Wait a moment!" yelled both defense counsel.

Atty. Harvey asked that all reference to search warrant be stricken from the record.

A bench conference followed and Arbuckle renewed his question about the search warrant. Atty. Harvey renewed his objection. It was ordered stricken from the record.

The judge said, "You made a search?"

Witness said, "yes."

The episode seemed much ado about nothing for after the witness finally could tell what he found after he had made the search he said: "nothing. The letter box was empty."

Morning recess was declared. Lieut. Stokes then returned to the stand and told of a conversation with Faber relative to the whereabouts of the Millen brothers.

He said he asked Faber if he had been in touch with the Millens by wire, letter or telephone, to which Faber said he had not.

Stokes then repeated, for the most part corroboration of Lieut. Ferrari's testimony, relative to the intercepted letter sent by Murton Millen to Saul Messinger to be relayed to Faber.

He told of how he obtained permission from Faber to get it after Faber had consulted his attorney.

Q—I show you this overcoat and ask whether or not you can identify it? A—Yes.

Atty. Harvey objected, but the court admitted the question.

Millens' Arrest In New York Detailed

Continuing his direct testimony, Lt. Stokes worked into the New York arrests of the Millens. He said:

"As a result of my investigation I went to New York. I went to the Lincoln Hotel with Lt. Eason, Detectives Fitzsimmons and O'Brien of the New York Police, and Detectives Hall and Smith of the Burns agency.

"We took a room in the hotel. Mr. O'Brien and I had occasion to go to the lobby. While we were there I saw a man sitting in a chair. As a result of some conversation with Mr. O'Brien I went upstairs and returned with Saul Messinger, leaving him on the mezzanine floor. Then I went down to the lobby. Mr. O'Brien and I stood about 20 feet in the rear of the man sitting in the chair. Saul Messinger came off the mezzanine stairway and approached the man sitting in the chair, and we approached him from the rear. He stood up and was about to shake hands with Messinger when I grabbed him from behind. O'Brien grabbed him on one side and Hall grabbed him on the other side. Hall put his hand in the man's overcoat pocked and removed a gun. He was taken upstairs and searched. From his clothing certain monies were taken. A comparison was made by me of the money removed from the overcoat and serial numbers."

Q—Who was the man? A—Irving Millen.

"We were in the room about 10 minutes when we returned to the lobby. Upon arrival I saw two uniformed policemen holding a man on the floor and another man sitting on his legs. He had bracelets on both hands. It was Murton Millen. He was taken upstairs and was later taken with his brother to New York police headquarters."

Lieut. Stokes testified he was present when Murton was questioned the following day by Chief Inspector Sullivan of the New York police.

Arbuckle asked him to repeat the conversation between Murton and the police inspector. Harvey objected but was overruled after a bench conference.

Stokes proceeded with his testimony but was interrupted once when he was reading Murton's reply to the question, "Who was in point.

30-HOUR LABOR BILL REVISED

By International News Service

Washington, May 10—A 30-hour-week bill, revised by administration officials, was slated to be presented the House labor committee this week.

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins and Donald R. Richberg, general counsel for NRA, are collaborating in a revision of the bill sponsored by Chairman Connery (D.) of Massachusetts of the House labor committee. This followed appeals of William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Connery to President Roosevelt to approve the 30-hour week legislation.

Declining to disclose details of the new proposal, Connery expressed confidence that a 30-hour week bill will be considered before Congress adjourns.

THAYER TELLS OF POWER NOTE

By Associated Press

Albany, N. Y., May 10—Sen. Warren T. Thayer testified today at the Senate Committee investigation of his utility connections that a letter he wrote to a utility executive expressing the hope his legislative activity was "satisfactory to your company" was written for political purposes.

"What difference did it make to you whether the company was satisfied with your work?" Clayton R. Lusk, Thayer's attorney asked.

"It made a great deal of difference," the senator answered. "There were many employes of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. in my district and many bond and stock holders, and it would become known to them how the company felt. That would help me in the coming election."

The letter referred to was written by Thayer to S. J. Magee, vice-president of the Associated Gas, March 28, 1927. It was one of several made public by the Federal Trade Commission, and precipitated the investigation of Thayer's official conduct, and also a general legislative inquiry of utilities.

DEFENSE USES CONFESSION IN SANITY TILT

By WIN BROOKS

last chapter of the Faber confession reciting the defendant's admission that he gave $3500 approximately his share of the Needham holdup loot, to his sweetheart, Rose Knellar, two days after the crime.

Both the state and the defense made much of the incident.

"Michael, you and I have been pals for agreat many years," began Faber's lawyer, William R. Scharton. "You are not holding it against Faber for that warning he gave you about the dynamite, are you?"

"No, sir," said the detective with an emphatic shake of his bald head.

"If he hadn't warned you, you might not be here now to testify?" Scharton asked.

"That's right," Fleming solemnly admitted.

Ferrari to end the confession, Fleming to tell of the dynamite and State Detective John Stokes to correlate all the separated bits of evidence, were called to the stand as the state's case approached its conclusion—the end in sight for late today or tomorrow.

Use Confession In Insanity Battle

The defense, having battled in vain to exclude Faber's confession, sought in cross-examination of Ferrari to turn it in Faber's favor as evidence of his mental condition and for the first time Judge Nelson P. Brown informed the jurors that he would later instruct them upon the law to guide them in their consideration of insanity evidence.

Ferrari's story of Faber's confession, dealing with the Rose Knellar "wedding present," was told just before his direct examination by Dist. Atty. Edmund R. Dewing was concluded.

"I went over to Dedham Jail and saw Faber," Ferrari testified. "I said to him, 'Do you know what happened last night?' He said 'No, what?' I said, 'Rose was arrested.' He said, 'What for?' I said 'She turned over to two lawyers, $3,500.' He said, "What did she do that for?' I said, 'I don't know.'"

"I then said, 'Did you give her that money?' and he said, 'Yes.' I said, 'When did you give it to her?' and he said, 'I gave it to her two days after the robbery.' I said, 'Did you have any talk with her when you gave her the bundle?' He said, 'Yes, I told her to put it away and not to look into it until we were married.'"

Counsel for Faber and for Murton and Irving Millen, on trial with him for the killing of Patrolman Forbes McLeod, objected to the introduction of Faber's signed confession and pending examination of it by both William R. Scharton and George Stanley Harvey, Judge Nelson P. Brown ordered it marked for identification.

State Detectives John Stokes and Michael Fleming were also morning witnesses, the State's case moving swiftly toward its close because Scharton, in his cross-examination, was not challenging evidence accepted as facts.

Mask Abe Wore In Holdup Causes Tilt

George W. Arbuckle, assistant district attorney, took a hand in the examination of witnesses for the first time and in a few moments was clashing with Scharton. Scharton asked Fleming to don the black mask identified as that which Faber wore during the crime. Fleming demurred.

"Why don't you put it on, Mr. Scharton, you'll look more natural," said Arbuckle.

"Now, don't you get excited," Scharton replied. "I'm very calm this morning."

After Stokes only Capt. Charles A. Van Amburgh and possibly Detective Edmund O'Brien of New York for the second time, remained to testify for the state's case, with a possibility of it closing late today.

Faber came back to the chapel-quiet courtroom to sit again like a corpse in chains—insane killer or an actor prompted by the will to live in a role of make-believe, the defense says one, the state the other.

Murt Millen, whom he is supposed to have looked upon as "greater than God," was not in the middle, next to Abe, today. Murt was shackled on the outside. There was much conjecture about the reason, but Harvey explained that Murton had a cold and needed freedom of his right hand to use his handkerchief. This appeared to be the case, for he used it frequently.

At the very outset of his cross-examination of Ferrari — much shorter than anyone had expected —Scharton sought to qualify the government's witness as an expert on the characteristics of criminals, and from this point proceeded to bring out that Faber showed little reluctance about telling the whole story and made no attempt to escape.

No Mention of Norma In Day's Testimony

"Did you think he was trying to shield Murt Millen?" Scharton asked.

"I thought he did, Mr. Scharton," said the detective.

Standing close together, their tones low, they fenced verbally for a quarter hour. Ferrari admitted he had seen no suggestion of the criminal in Faber's manners at their first meetings. He admitted there was no evasion with the exception of one time—when he pretended not to know that "P. G." in Murt's letter meant police guns.

Ferrari denied he had made any promise to Faber in order to procure the confession—no offer or intimation of help, no suggestion to "get on the band wagon."

"You realized that his confession meant the electric chair if I, were true and he was sane?"

"If he was found guilty—don't you mean that also?"

"Yes."

"Yes."

Once Scharton referred to Ferrari's success in obtaining the confession without promise or duress as "your charming work."

Murt's girl-bride, Norma, named yesterday in the Faber confession as knowing of the robbery, was not mentioned in the testimony.

Whether the Faber confession, as it fell from Ferrari's thin lips in short slashing sentences, will have any effect on Harvey's plans to call Norma in her husband's defense, could not be learned. Not until next week, the fifth of the trial, will she take the stand in any event, it now appears.

TRAPPED 6 DAYS ON LEDGE; DIES

Miami, Fla., May 10—Shirley Brewer, 42, died today after being imprisoned for six days on a narrow ledge 13 stories above the ground in an unfinished hotel building.

Brewer, a pharmacist, was reported missing by his wife last Friday. Last night a man who had climbed to the top of the building for a birdseye view of the city, found him unconscious.

He had fallen apparently from the roof to the narrow ledge, which saved him from plunging down an elevator shaft, but proved his death trap.

U. S. SEEKS NEW DEBT-PAYING PROPOSAL

By KINGSBURY SMITH
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, May 10—Future payment of approximately $12,500,000,000 which Europe owes the American taxpayers hung in the balance today as the administration flirted with the idea of finding some new debt settlement plan that would prove satisfactory to both the debtors and Congress.

With President Roosevelt maintaining silence concerning what he has in mind, speculation was rife over the proposals he might make.

These ranged anywhere from a ten billion dollar slash by virtually wiping out past and future internat payments to possible acceptance of tin and other goods in payment of the debts.

ROOSEVELT SILENT

The President smiled at all of them, said nothing, except that his debt message to Congress was a little nearer, that the debtors would be handled on their individual merits, and the government's position remained unchanged concerning its hope of collecting something.

Sources close to the White House continued to maintain the belief the President would "pull something out of the hat" before June 15 when Europe is due to pay another $75 million dollars on account.

WAIT EUROPEAN VIEWS

However, it was felt in some quarters this would depend upon whether he was able to obtain in advance some assurance from the European debtor nations that they would be willing to resume full payments if he recommended a readjustment.

If the President fails to receive such assurances, he may drop the idea of presenting any new plan and merely submit a report to Congress on the status of the debt situation, with a possible recommendation for readjustment of the debt owed by Finland, the only European nation to meet in full its obligations to this country.

Two Greater Boston boys, who won $30 on a flyer at the Kentucky Derby on a $10 bet, went on a hitch-hiking tour to spend the $40 total.

Today they were in temporary custody of Newark, N. J., police, awaiting arrival of their parents. The boys are Paul Lighton, 17, 651 Concord ave., Cambridge, and Alexander Stone, 16, Belmont st., Watertown.

The boys told police they tried New York, but didn't like it. Then they tried Newark and went broke. That situation called for an appeal to police for money from home.

'SOAK THRIFTY' BILL SIGNED

Experts estimated the full effect of the law will not be felt until 1935. They counted on only $167,000,000 by the end of the next fiscal year on June 30, 1935.

LARGEST SINGLE ITEM

A one-tenth of one per cent tax on the declared value of corporation capital stock and a five per cent levy on earnings above 12½ per cent of that capital were estimated to raise $95,000,000 annually for the largest single item in the act. These taxes were imposed to finance the public works program, but went out automatically with repeal.

New levies on the transfer of estates after death ranged from 1 to 60 per cent as compared with the old range of 1 to 45. Credits on state inheritance taxes are not allowed on the increase.

Only railroads henceforth may file consolidated returns for themselves and subsidiaries. The privilege is abolished for other corporations.

The new income tax schedules levy a flat 4 per cent normal rate on the first $4000 of individual net income. They retain the $1000 exemption for single persons, $2500 for married and $400 for each minor dependent, which may be deducted from net income to give the taxable income.

LITTLE FELLOW GAINS

A 10 per cent credit is allowed for all earned net income up to $14,000, thereby reducing payments on small incomes.

The old 8 per cent normal tax on net incomes above $4,000 is eliminated, but surtaxes now begin at $4,000 instead of $6,000.

These surtaxes start at 4 per cent and swell through 29 brackets to 59 per cent on excesses over $1,000,000. Previously, the rate started at 1 per cent on the excess between $6,000 and $10,000, and rose through 53 brackets to 55 per cent on those over $1,000,000.

A new capital gains and loss provision was a direct result of Senate testimony that partners in J. P. Morgan & Company and other New York houses paid no income taxes in some of the depression years. From now on, capital losses may be deducted from taxable income only to the extent of capital gains, with the exception that $2000 of any excess loss may be charged off from ordinary income.

For tax purposes, capital gains are measured at 100 per cent if the asset is held less than one year, 80 per cent if from one to two years, 60 per cent from two to five, 40 per cent from five to 10 and 30 per cent if more than 10 years.

Partnership allowances for losses are limited to curtail deductions to the extent of gains from the sale of capital assets.

Charge-offs arising from exchanges of stock and corporate reorganizations are limited.

New language will seek to insure that gasoline and oil taxes are paid by the original producer. Though not in the law, the Treasury expects to raise as much as $55,000,000 by more rigid administration of depreciation allowances.

The new publicity provision will open to public inspection a separate statement to be filed by income taxpayers giving t e gross and net income, total deductions and credits and the tax payable.

Taxes on candy and soft drinks, furs valued up to $75 and jewelry not worth more than $25 are repealed. The five cents a $100 tax on the sale of produce for future delivery is slashed to three cents. January 1 is set as the date for repealing the bank check tax.

The fire broke out on a couch in the apartment of Thomas C. Prince, second floor tenant with his wife. Smoke filled the house and aroused the Jennings police dog. The consiant barking of the police dog aroused the Jennings family whom in turn awakened the Prince family.

Mery Jennings was found in her room, overcome by smoke. She was rushed to the street by her father and taken to the neighbors, where a physician revived her.

The dog would not leave the burning apartment until both families were safe.

LEE TRACY ASSIGNED REPORTER'S ROLE IN PARAMOUNT'S "ONE WOMAN" FILM

Claudette Colbert Will Play Lead in Screen Version of Tiffany Thayer's Story

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Universal Service

Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.

Los Angeles, May 10—The reporter in "One Woman" who lets a murder mystery story haunt his waking hours and all but ruin his life, will be played by Lee Tracy. Tiffany Thayer, who wrote this fascinating yarn—the best book he has yet had published, should favor Tracy who is really the official newspaper reporter of the screen.

The woman who causes all the havoc—well Paramount favors Claudette Colbert for the role. The picture will have to be filmed with the cut-back method. The action you see, takes place during the life time of the woman although the book opens after she is dead. Will you please tell me why Paramount is changing the title to "Men Are Men Worth It?"

They all come to Hollywood sooner or later. I mean film producers. William Rowland who produced a series of pictures with Monte Brice in the East is stationed at Columbia, getting ready to produce the well known musical comedy, "The Girl Friend." Mr. Rowland has chosen Jack Haley and Joey Ray for the two leads and he has commissioned Herbert Fields who wrote the book to write the adaptation. The music by Larry Hart and Dick Rodgers was, of course, one of the big features of "The Girl Friend" which flourished for some time as a Broadway musical.

* * *

Constance Bennett's embarrassment and protestations that she has no voice haven't prevented "Moulin Rouge" from being one of the most successful of the musical pictures. Connie's public really likes to hear her sing and although she may not be a Lily Pons she has an original and very pleasing voice. There is talk now that she may be kept on at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the lead in "Broadway Melody of 1934." Connie has received word from the Marquis De La Falaise that because of the rainy season he hasn't been able to make much progress with his picture and he won't be home for several months.

Just twenty-five years ago this week a far-seeing young man named William Selig made the first picture to be filmed in Los Angeles. Mr. Selig called his picture "The Power of the Sultan" and it was made on the top of a building at 8th and Olive sts. Little did he know that one day a suburb of Los Angeles called Hollywood, would become famous the world over as the home of motion pictures. In that original cast were Hobart Bosworth and Stella Adams as leads, also Tom Santschi who has since passed away. Today Miss Adams and Mr. Bosworth are playing together in "Whom the Gods Destroy," Bosworth as a featured player and Miss Adams in a bit.

Chatter in Hollywood

Well, my hat's off to William Davidson, well known character actor. He is the only man I have ever known who has been able to get married in Los Angeles and elude the prying reporters. Mr. Davidson was married a week ago Thursday to Helen Bolton, well known stage actress. The amusing part is that Mr. Davidson didn't try to keep his wedding a secret. He just went and got married.

Charlie Butterworth just cannot be funny these days. He's home sick with sinus trouble and unable to force a single smile. That's why he asked to be relieved from playing the leading comedy role in "Rear Car," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture which goes into production any moment now. Edward Everett Horton, another one of my favorite comics on the screen, has been signed by M-G-M and will do the comedy honors in "Rear Car."

* * *

Joe Penner's radio audience will have a chance to see him in person, that is, I mean in a movie. Paramount who is collecting all the big radio names available has signed Mr. Penner for their "Big Broadcast of 1934." If you listen to the radio you probably remember him as the comic who says "You nasty man" and "I wanna' doo-it" if you don't listen, well, he will be new to you when you see him in the movies.

Let me introduce to you the first freelance stylist in the picture business. Rita Kaufman, who for two or three years told the Fox Players what to wear and who designed the Janet Gaynor, the Sally Eilers and the Lilian Harvey costumes, today resigned from the Fox company. She says she will not sign a contract with any company. She prefers to take pictures on assignment, thereby picking and choosing her own stars to dress. She will, in other words, be in the position of the freelance player.

Hub Premiere for Revue by Anderson

John Murray Anderson's production, "Up Pops the King," will have its premiere on the stage of the Metropolitan tomorrow. This is the newest Broadway musical revue. The cast is headed by Doctor Rockwell, of comedy fame. Other featured members include Kay Picture, "parasonality" girl from Texas"; the Delmar Twins, two youths who are two girls from Hollywood, Earnest McChesney, tenor, and Barry, Biren and Wyler. In addition to these there are Meta Carlyle and Frank Leslie. Last, but not least except in size, is the entire troupe of "Singer's Midgets," who present themselves in novelty numbers specially staged by Anderson.

John Murray Anderson

The background for the ensemble numbers is supplied by the Bob Alton girls. The scenery for the show was designed by Clare Robinson. The musical numbers of the show were written by Henry Sullivan and Earle Crooker. Among the new songs are "In the Garden of My Heart," "The Command to Love," "Mariajuana," "Long Live the King" and "All Roads Lead to New York."

In addition to this elaborate Broadway musical, the theatre will present the Elida Ballet and Josephine Huston in a special Scotch fantasy of song and dance.

Dudley Feature

The featured artist in tomorrow's stage show, the Dudley Theater in Roxbury, will be the popular Adrian O'Brien, well known to radio and stage. O'Brien will render several popular songs. The screen program will be Will Rogers in "David Harum" and George O'Brien in "Ever Since Eve."

Cambridge Girl in New Picture

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Hel-lup! Of all the names in the directory, GIGi Parrish crashes the movies under the "moniker" of Schultz! For it is under that name that you will see her listed in the cast when "20th Century" has its premiere at Keith's late tomorrow evening. It will mark the Cambridge girl's debut in big movie company, and will be the first time her own cognomen will have been on screen. In other words, this Wampus Baby Star of 1934 has a role in a big production.

* * *

And it is indeed big company in which this home town miss makes her bow. For John Barrymore is the star, Carole Lombard is the leading lady, and Walter Connolly is the second character man. Other players to be seen are Roscoe Karns, Ralph Forbes and Etienne Girardot. The film is herealded as a grand comedy, and well it should be, for it has for authors, Charlie MacArthur, Ben Hecht and Charles Hilholland, with MacArthur and Hecht credited with the screen adaptation. They are two of Hollywood's best, with successes only to their credit.

* * *

GIGi Parrish is petite, auburn-haired and blue-eyed. Over a year ago she motorcycled into Hollywood; she had just celebrated her 21st birthday. Samuel Goldwyn gave her a chance as a showgirl in "Roman Scandals," and later she was similarly decorative in "Moulin Rouge." Then Columbia took her on for the Schultz part in "20th Century," and of course everything hinges on producer reaction to her handling and appearance in the "bit."

His Portrayal Lacks Lustre of Old

By HARRIS MORGAN

When I first saw Walter Hampden play "Hamlet" in Boston nearly 15 years ago, he impressed me very much. Since that time I have seen his "Hamlet" again and again. Last night as he assumed the role of the Prince of Denmark for the Colonial stage, I felt that he wasn't as impressive as in the past.

• • •

Not that Hampden is a poor Hamlet. On the contrary he is rated as one of the best and his characterization will have its own page in the history of Thespis' successors. Nor on the other hand was the audience as critical as I. It was positively hearty. But the same Hampden's "Hamlet" lacks the color of another day. It is paler with the years, just as Hampden himself has become. Of course Hamlet's form is sort of pale in one sense of the word, but the substance—never.

• • •

In Restrained Fashion

Advocates of the "sane" school in the age-old argument on the Prince's mental status are interested to find Hampden on their side. Personally the matter is so conducive to argument and so open to a discussion either way I refuse to be convinced or prejudiced about it. But to give the Shakesperian credit, he played the Hamlet of last night in the restrained fashion that is so well-liked. No ranting or raving, or anything resembling either. Maybe that was the trouble. Maybe it was too restrained.

Mabel Moore who played Queen Gertrude, Hamlet's mother, and Erna Rowan, who does the Ophelia, seem to be quite true artistes. They are fine gold in the performances with their starred leader.

• • •

A Familiar Plot

There is no sense at all in going over a plot that is only too well known to practically every theater-goer of more than ten, and so there is little left to say after discussing Hampden's "Hamlet."

An actor is either an outstanding Hamlet, a good Hamlet, or no Hamlet at all. Hampden doesn't quite hit the old mark of being outstanding, but he is good.

It was interesting to note the well filled house and the spirit of the evening. All these old-fashioned amusements, like going to see "Hamlet" are clearly back with as much zest as the styles of the Gay Nineties. It is remarkable—albeit very natural—thing, how the world revolves, and fashions revolve with it. Even fashions in going to the theater.

Making-Up in the Movies Is Sometimes Just Enchanting

Billie Burke and Alan Mowbray have just quarreled in "Where Sinners Meet," coming to the RKO Keith Boston tomorrow. But it isn't long in the film before the sun breaks through the clouds, and love shines again.

Here is a sample of truly bracing affection, between H. B. Warner and Margot Grahame, in "Sorrell and Son," powerful film drama on screen at Loew's Orpheum tomorrow. Warner is a real star of acting in the movie.

Two Films at Twin Houses

"Bottoms Up" opens Saturday at the Modern and Beacon Theaters. "Pat" Patterson, importation from the English stage, makes her American film debut in Bottoms Up. Playing opposite Miss Patterson is Sonnery Tim and John Bole. The comedy features are contributed mainly by Herbert Mundin, Sid Silvers and Robert Emmett O'Connor.

On the same program the theaters present "Woman Unafraid" At the RKO Keith-Boston tomorrow there will be a first run double feature program of more than ordinary merit. Diana Wynyard and Clive Brook, stars of "Cavalcade," will be together again in "Where Sinners Meet." Been Em Bo'ge in which Walter Huston is starred is the other attraction.

Where Sinners Meet" is an adaptation of A. A. Milne's stage play, "The Dover Road." It is a spicy comedy that borders upon farce. The cast includes Billie Burke Reginald Owen, Alan Mowbray, Phyllis Barry and Walter Armitage.

"Keep 'Em Rolling" has for [illegible] Frances Dee together with Robert Shayne, Frank Craven, Minna Gombell, Pat O'Brien and Ralph Remley.

[illegible] as the [illegible] Latest news reels and music by Larry Flint and his RKO-Bostonians, are other features on the program.

A DRAMATIC OPPORTUNITY is yours this summer if you wish to attend the Moscow Theater Festival . . . Sailing August 11 on the Georgic from New York and stopping in Boston to pick up New England members of the tour, patrons of this tour will have a chance to stop at Galway, Cobh, Liverpool, London, Copenhagen, Helsingfors, Leningrad and Moscow . . .

Moscow has many interests for every intelligent traveller, we are told. In the field of drama, Soviet Russia has made outstanding progress. Many think of the Soviet Union only in connection with political and economic changes, but in the drama, and in the fine arts in general, the Soviets appear to have shown great originality. Moscow has become the Mecca of theater-lovers from all over the world . . .

NINA PHILLIPS

The Moscow Theater Festival will be held during the first ten days of September. Prof. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow Dana will lead the tour. The theaters are opening earlier than usual this season to enable the members of the tour to return to America in time for the opening of American schools and colleges toward the end of September. Visits will be made to the Russian moving picture theaters and opportunity will be given to see Eisenstein and other film directors at work. Various ballet schools will be visited, as well as the Circus, the Blue Blouses, the Children's Theater and other performances. General sightseeing will be included . . .

Prof. Dana will lecture on the boat on the way over . . . he is well qualified to interest you as he taught two years at the University of Paris in France and five years at Columbia University in New York, where he was assistant professor of comparative literature. He has spent several years in Moscow studying the contemporary drama. He is regarded as one of the outstanding authorities on the Russian theater . . .

MISS BETTY FROTHINGHAM, a New York debutante of next season, will be the house guest of Miss Dorothy West, chairman of the Overall Party for the benefit of the M. S. P. C. C. which is being held Friday evening in The Barn at 6 Byron st., Beacon Hill . . .

Nina Phillips, post-debutante daughter of Mrs. John C. Phillips, is giving a dinner before the dance at which will be several of this season's and last's buds . . . Nancy Whitman, Cathleen Crocker, Anne Warren, Alice Burrage, Cornelia Pentecost, Anne Tuckerman and Madelaine Phillips, who will come down from Northampton where she is a student at Smith College . . . in the masculine group will be Sam Warren, Joe Robbins, Marshall Hazeltine, Tommy Choate, Edward Robbins and Ben Bacon . . .

Mr. and Mrs. George S. West and their family will open their summer home at Squam Lake after the Harvard-Yale races . . .

Huntington Wolcott, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lawrence, Mrs. Chatfield Whitman, Mr. Reginald Boardman and Mr. Francis Brooks . . . There have been so many acceptances for this dancing party it may be possible that an overflow party will have to be arranged . . .

Mr. Hallam Movius, Jr., son of Mrs. Movius, is sailing on Saturday, May 19, for an anthropological expedition to Ireland . . . we hear so much of excavating expeditions to Ireland, we are wondering if they will discover a family tree among the shamrocks . . . we are certainly proud of the roots which we have over there.

* * *

Millicent Turner, daughter of Mrs. Marie Lee Frothingham, debutante of last season, is sailing for Europe with her grandmother, Mrs. George Lee, on May 20. They will return in September.

Pops Features Variety

By MOSES SMITH

Music for many tastes filled an enjoyable program at last night's [illegible] concert, and characteristically the most important of Arthur Fiedler's list were the Goldmark "Sakuntala" overture, the prelude to Wagner's "Meistersinger," the Polovetzkian Dances from "Prince Igor" by Borodin, and the now popular "Rio Grande" of Constant Lambert.

In the latter two works Mr. Fiedler had the assistance of the Cecilia Society chorus, of which he is the regular conductor. In the exciting music of Borodin the chorus sang with freshness and vigor of tone which matched the tumultuous orchestral sound, so that the performance had the barbaric spirit which it ought to have.

In contrast, the singers graduated their voices with unusually sensative nuance in "The Rio Grande." The solo singing here of Marie Murray had rare beauty, though it has acquired a slight self-consciousness since her first stunning performance two or three seasons ago. Mr. Jesus Maria Sanroma's diabolical virtuosity in the brilliant piano solo of this work is now familiar to Boston concert-hall habitues. As to Mr. Fiedler's conception of the score, what it sacrifices in the way of plasticity of tempo it more than gains in forward movement and jazz-like rhythm.

The applause of the large audience following the playing of "The Rio Grande" was demonstrative. The concert contained other stimulating incidents, not the least of which was the performance of Hamilton Harty's tasteful setting of the lovely "Londonderry Air."

TRUE TO TYPE

Gouty Radicals or Happy Ones Found Uncommon

By GILBERT SELDES

"FEW radicals have good digestions," says Samuel Butler in his vastly entertaining "Notebooks." His argument is that eating food is an attempt to convert food to our own way of thinking and "when it sticks to its own opinion and refuses to be converted we say it disagrees with us."

He adds that cooking is good because "it unsettles the meat's mind and prepares it for new ideas." Particularly the idea of being eaten.

On the major point, about radicals and their digestions, a survey ought to be made. It is too important a point to be taken merely on Butler's say-so. Shaw was a radical and insisted that his digestion was perfect; like Shaw, Shelley was a vegetarian and should, according to Shaw, have enjoyed perfect health. And so many radicals haven't enough to eat that they ought to escape the intestins' perdition of the rich. At any rate, I know of no gouty Reds.

* * *

AFTER food comes love. What about the love-life of Karl Marx? Was it happy? All that I know is that he married Jenny von Westphalen, a descendant of the Earl of Argyll, (the one who was beheaded under James II) and "she was a most faithful companion to Marx during all the vicissitudes of his career" and Marx outlived her only fifteen months. Perhaps great radicals lead quiet, monogamous lives. Freud should look into that.

There used to be a time when any one radical would be sure to want to change ten or fifteen different fundamental habits of mankind. If he believed in free love, or disbelieve in unfree evolution. If he was a vegetarian he might also hate all those who slept late and try to assassinate all those who wore beards. This was when radicalism was actually a lunatic fringe.

* * *

NOWADAYS your good radical is a student of economics and you have to dig pretty deep before you discover any oddities. If Stalin interferes with art is not because he hates Picasso but because he wants a certain economic effect and thinks Picasso will not give it to him. If Mussolini (who is fundamentally radical) were to denounce the eating of veal, it would not be for humanitarian but for military reasons.

* * *

MERELY to hate the whole world, alone, is unpleasant. To join a society for human extermination is a suicide club—is better. Your private grudge becomes universal. And then, when you can add to this warm feeling of companionship an even warmer feeling—the hope of destroying the world and moulding it to your wishes—you have a great satisfaction. It is not as good as the original satisfaction of a good digestion or happy love affair. But it is the next best thing.

NOW curfew tolls in the old church steeple,
Bidding good night to sensible people;
Now thousands and thousands of people sensible
Think staying up later is reprehensible;
Now wives relentlessly bridge games terminate,
As thoughts of the morrow begin to germinate;
Now gangsters, with pistols full of notches,
Yawn discreetly and glance at their watches;
Now owls desist from to-wit-to-wooing,
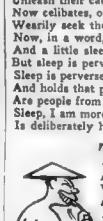
Now husband and wife and spouse and spouse
Unleash their cat and lock up their house;
Now celibates, of whom there are lots,
Wearily seek their lonely cots;
Now, in a word, the day is ended,
And a little sleep would be simply splendid.
But sleep is perverse as human nature,
Sleep is perverse as a legislature,
And holds that people who wish to sleep
Are people from whom away to keep.
Sleep, I am more than sorry to say,
Is deliberately half a world away.



THE curfew that tolls in yonder steeple
Is unheard by a hemisphere of people.
Across the world the alarm, clock's reveille
Wakes foreigners, drowsy and dishevelly;
Across the world the sun is aloft,
And polish their teeth and shine their faces
And go to work in various places.
Now opens wide their portal of day,
And sleep, you might think, would go away,
Sleep would abandon that hemisphere
And distribute its favors over here.
But sleep is perverse as human nature,
Sleep is perverse as a legislature,
Sleep is as forward as hives or goitres,
And where it is least desired it loiters.
Sleep is as shy as a maiden sprite,
So people who go to bed to sleep
Must count French premiers or sheep,
And people who ought to arise from bed
Yawn and go back to sleep instead.

AND you can pile all the poems in the world in a heap,
And this is the first to tell the truth about sleep.

READING-WRITING

James Warburg Analyzes the Money Muddle

By WILLIAM SOSKIN

MR. ROOSEVELT and his advisers listened to young James P. Warburg once when they called him in to clear up some of the intricacies of international finance they did not understand. They appointed him financial adviser to the American delegation to the London Economic Conference last year. Since then the President's monetary policies have been more in accord with the views of other professors, and Mr. Warburg has been largely ignored. But it looks as though this son of Paul Warburg will be summoned once more. You may learn why in Mr. Warburg's new book, The Money Muddle.

Mr. Warburg is a practical banker who agrees, generally, with the theory that increased wages and profits and a healthy readjustment of prices is the way out of the muddle. This can be done not by the simple piling up of more idle money will relieve suffering. Increasing the supply of money is a mere political gesture. What is needed, he says, is to apply the price theory to all kinds of money in the present economic structure—paper currency, and bank deposit or "check" money, and to increase the velocity with which all this money circulates.

This cannot be accomplished, says Mr. Warburg, if the volume of business and the speed of business transaction is held up by phony moneycures which do not take the entire industrial process into account.

* * *

AS a practicing banker Mr. Warburg is interested in reforming the investment system—not along the old lines of High-pressure salesmanship and upon the old principle of catering to the desire for speculative profit, but in order to obtain a more educated public through the agency of more intelligently conscientious investment bankers.

President Roosevelt, says Mr. Warburg, has banished defeatism, but he has aroused a new fear—the fear of too much medicine. It is suicidal, he suggests, to rush into a new extreme where "to earn an honest dollar is, as William Randolph Hearst has put it, 'to be abused as a pickpocket.'"

LETTERS I WOULD LOVE TO MAIL

By J. P. McEVOY

HOLLYWOOD, May 9.

To the Boss,
Studio,
Dear Boss:

WELL, I see where they are after the movies again. Going to clean 'em and tone 'em down and brush 'em 'em out. In the old days when somebody wanted to go on a crusade he had to face a lot of work, a lot of hardship, and the possibility of getting conked on the casque with a halidom or a halbert or something equally obsolete. Now you don't even have to leave town to go on a crusade. And there's no danger. And you're not chasing a mythical Grail. All you have to do is find the nearest movie and jump on it.

J. P. McEvoy

Up to a certain point I think it is good for movies to be jumped on. Conditions 'em. Toughens 'em. Gives 'em fiber. Some day I hope they'll even get tough enough to jump right back. But maybe that's expecting too much. The movies can take it. They've proven that. And when you can take it in this country you'll find plenty to dish it. So the movies take it, and more and more step out and give it to 'em.

* * *

THE present battle cry is for more movies for children. Most movies are for children now, but that isn't enough. All movies must be for children. There mustn't be any adult movies—on the presumption, I suppose, that there are no adults in this country. Well, maybe there aren't. You don't meet many, that is true—and they go around talking to themselves.

Probably such strange creatures don't deserve to have any movies. Or books. Or plays. After all, there are so few of them they don't rate much consideration. Personally, I don't think they should have any movies. We should make everything for the children. And all the books, too. There shouldn't be any words in any books that children shouldn't hear. And they shouldn't hear any words that would suggest anything but sweetness and light.

All grownups should be treated as children and all children as little boobs—sweet, innocent little boobs, to be sure, but boobs. Then when and as they grow to boobhood we won't have all this difficulty about censoring the movies. All pictures will be made for boobs with boobs and by boobs.

A great calm will descend over the country—there will be no more of this bickering and fighting and hard feeling. Everyone will be happy. They won't know any different.

* * *

NOW, a lot of people get angry when the movies are jumped on. To them I would say peace, be still. Try my solution. The old jiu-jitsu technique. Conquer by yielding. Don't hold out for anything. Give in. More movies for children? All right. All the movies for children? Okay. Let us take out sex, religion, politics, any allusions to race, color or creed. Let us have nothing but stories about Santa Claus, Goldilocks and the Little Boy with His Finger Stuck in the Holland Dike. Or the Holland Tunnel. Or his nose.

Calmly,
J. P. McEvoy.

And you—you have been deaf always.

CEREMONIALS

They Enrich and Dignify Our Dull Existence

Says ALDOUS HUXLEY

LONDON—Easter in Rome is always a very grand occasion, but this year the ceremonies were more than ordinarily splendid. For on the Easter Sunday of 1934 a new saint was aded to the calendar: Giovanni Bosco, the founder of the Salesian Order, was solemnly canonized in St. Peter's.

I have seen kings crowned and buried, armies reviewed, the pomp of Indian princes, but never a ceremony that could compare for elaborate splendor with the rites performed in honor of the new saint. Magnificence succeeded magnificence; complication was added to complication. In their rich hieratic vestments the Princes of the Church performed the interminable series of ritual gestures prescribed by ancient tradition. One had the feeling that they were moving through a kind of ceremonial labyrinth of which they alone possessed the secret. From outside the uninitiated could only look on and marvel at the certainty and precision of their advance, through the complications of that mysterious maze.

THERE was a time when all human existence was a great deal more ceremonious than it is at present; when not only religion but every-day living had its elaborate rituals. Good manners were once a labyrinth almost as complicated as that through which a Pope must move during a canonization. Today they have become informal to the point almost of disappearing altogether.

Our ambition is to get through life with the minimum of fuss and at the maximum speed. It is all very convenient, no doubt. But I sometimes wonder whether we do not pay rather highly for our convenience. For, to start with, informality is by no means invariably more convenient than formality. The performance of an elaborate ritual of good manners may be a long and tiresome job, but it may easily spare us all manner of unpleasant shocks and frictions.

Informality easily becomes mere boorishness; and if men discard the elaborate hypocrisy of good manners it is, too often, only to indulge quite frankly and unrestrained restraint in their natural selfishness.

* * *

AND this is not all. A ceremonious existence is an existence, so to speak, larger than life, or most of the time, it must be confessed, living is a rather flat, undignified affair. Ceremonies enrich and variegate and beautify the natural—the all too natural—process, heighten its significance, and lend it something of an ideal dignity. The participants in an elaborate and symbolically significant ceremonial are temporarily promoted to a higher grade of existence.

The Church has proclaimed that the personal defects of the priest do not detract from the glory of the rites he may perform. The doctrine has a deep psychological truth; for a man seems and feels superior to his ordinary self when he is occupied with some impressive ceremony. That ceremonial gives men a profound psychological satisfaction is proved by the persistent and rather pathetic attempts made to revive it in countries where the traditional excuses for it have disappeared.

In America, for example, a congress of almost any description will be made a pretext for the staging of complicated rites. And a hunger for ceremonial is doubtless one of the causes of the success achieved by the various Fascist movements in Europe. The salutings and paradings, the singings and shoutings and trupetings, all the military rituals of Fascism, provide people with excitements and fulfilments which they cannot find elsewhere.

* * *

LIBERALISM has lost ground (among many other reasons) because it was too rationalistic to give its adherents the rites and ceremonies they needed. A liberal is expected to live and die on the merely human plane. But men aspire to be larger and more dignified than life. That is why, if they find the established religions unsatisfactory, they put on colored shirts and march about with band and banners.

BEDSIDE MANNERS

Asks BEN RAY REDMAN

THOSE of us who have lived in the world thirty years and more have seen great changes. But no change which these aging eyes have witnessed, including the changes wrought by the Great War, seems to me quite as startling as the profound transformation that has overtaken the medical profession—the truly astonishing revelation that has seized upon the ancient and honorable bedside manner, and turned it upside down, inside out, and back to front.

Thirty years ago, it was a doctor's business, and also his pretension, to know all about the human body and the ills that are its heritage. Today it may still be his business, but the pretension has gone the way of leg-o'-mutton sleeves and Dundreary whiskers. There is a new fashion in the medical profession—the fashion of professing an absolute minimum of knowledge. The doctor of my boyhood was the embodiment of therapeutic omniscience; he had an inexhaustible supply of long and lovely Latin words with which to meet all embarrassing questions, and he was never stumped.

The doctor of today speaks colloquial English, and is almost indecently ready to proclaim himself stumped on every possible occasion. No matter what the nature of a case may be—whether it involves a common cold, cancer, arthritis, tuberculosis, shingles or an ingrowing wart—the up-to-date doctor is likely to declare blandly: "As a matter of fact, we don't know very much about this just yet, but give us another hundred years, and we may learn quite a bit. After all, we are just beginning to find out how little we do know."

* * *

THE doctor of my boyhood appeared master of any disease or emergency that he encountered. He took your temperature, fingered your pulse, counted your longues, tapped your chest, flouriahed his stethoscope, looked preternaturally solemn, shook his head, and then prescribed with Olympian deliberation and certainty.

His modern counterpart, on the other hand, smiles genially, parks himself comfortably on the foot of the bed, and says: "Not feeling so fit, eh? Well, I guess the best thing we can do is to lie low for a while and let nature take its course. Wonderful doctor, nature. Of course, I could give you a lot of pink pills and fancy prescriptions if you wanted me to, but I know you're much too sensible for that. Keep quiet, go light on food, drink plenty of water, and I'll be in to see you tomorrow."

It is all very cozy, intimate, frank, and flattering to the patient's intelligence. But where, oh where, is that feeling of trusting confidence in beneficent authority that was engendered by the bedside manner of the old fashioned physician? Where indeed? Sometimes I lament the loss.

ALLOW ME TO SAY

There's Nothing Terrifying in the 'Classics'

By C. HANSON TOWNE

MANY people—almost anyone—is frightened of the word "classics." They look upon a book thus designated as something formidable, actually to be avoided; whereas, of course, a book never lives unless it is a friend of mankind. All that the word classic connotes, therefore, is that a thing has stood the test of time—the most difficult test there is.

Just as really great people are always simple, so all great art is simple. There was little that was complex in Lincoln, and little indeed in the plays of Shakespeare. Because the latter's plays are written for the most part in blank verse, the man in the street imagines, until he has read them, that they are difficult. He is not used to poetry. Poetry is something utterly alien to him. A good swinging rhyme he can stand, perhaps; but why on earth should anyone want to write—much less to read—blank verse? But if Shakespeare had not used the lofty medium of unrhymed verse his plays would have lost much of their power. Wherever and what ever he could he descended to the common speech of his day; yet in his blank verse which is oftenest quoted—and those deathless lyrics which run through his dramas like a golden thread.

* * *

NO one should be terrified at the words "masterpiece" or "classics." They are simply a poor way of saying that a certain thing is worth seeing or reading or hearing. And if we will but get over our first fear the rest is easy. I remember getting a young law student to read Keat's Ode on a Grecian Urn, and he came back to me in a week, his face aglow, saying: "Well, I know it by heart. I had no idea a poem I'd heard so much about —highbrow stuff, you know—was like that. Why, it's so beautiful it makes me ache; and it's so simply beautiful, isn't it?"

He had found out for himself, you see—which is always the best way to arrive at anything lovely.

Country Auction

AUCTIONS in the country are far different from city auctions. They are much pleasanter occasions, especially if you have never experienced one before. I attended one not so long ago in the Berkshires with a friend. It was held on a small farm whose house and immediate environs gave the effect of a golf club playing host to a Sunday School picnic.

Many greetings were called out to us when we arrived. Then a bell rang, summoning us to comfortable seats in some large rocking-chairs that would later be sold from under us.

My friend opened the big silk bag that contained her sewing work, and bade me do the same. But I was of no mind to sew, with that highly colored, swiftly moving picture spread out before me.

The old house, white and clean, flowers hiding its stone foundation, and curtains fluttering from its windows, kept disgorging furniture, decorations, wearing apparel, and, at the back, kitchen wares and farm implements.

The auctioneer was of a kindly, jocular nature and, as he knew all present, his businesslike talk was interspersed with suggestions to the various families as to what they wanted or needed to buy.

Details were lost in the whole beauty of the scene. The house and the grouped people were merely a bit of foreground, the picture was the great space under that inverted bowl they call the sky, and the passing of one more of the old and delightful, if not stately, homes of New England. No dilierent from a city auction!

VAGABONDIA

A Politician in the Family and All's Well

By BRUNO LESSING

ROME.—Dropped into the Farnese Palace this afternoon to see the French Ambassador. (Sounds rather spiffy, doesn't it?) I didn't see him but a good-looking young chap fixed up my passport visa, which was all I wanted.

This is one of the finest and most impressive of the palaces of Rome. Hundreds of rooms, most of them forty feet high and several big enough to hold three thousand people. It must cost a fortune a year to keep it up. France pays for it, although 40,000,000 Frenchmen are not aware of the figures. The French Ambassador could do just as well in a suite of offices in some hotel or office building which wouldn't cost one-fiftieth as much. And pay us the difference —you know.

But that's France's affair. I got thinking about ours.

* * *

ONCE upon a time—and, believe me, this is a true story—there was a fellow named Bill. We went to school together and I can vouch for all the facts. They are facts that may strike you as being silly, but they are the same facts that lie at the bottom of one of the greatest problems of government.

Bill found a tottering factory and bought it. He did his work in the sales-room, using an old trunk for his table. He had a brother-in-law. Brothers-in-law are one of Nature's pet complications. Bill didn't think much of his and refused to give him a job in the factory.

The factory succeeded and Bill became rich. The Governor of his State appointed him to an important job because Bill was a born organizer. The first thing that Bill did was to order a magnificent roll-top desk and a rug for his new office. The taxpayers of the State paid for both. The amount was divided among the taxes that they paid.

* * *

THEN Bill appointed his brother-in-law to a job. Not in his own office, of course. He got a fellow officeholder, named Sam, to give his brother-in-law a job and, as a reward, out of the public pocket, he gave Sam's cousin or nephew a job in his office.

Bill didn't think enough of his brother-in-law to give him a job in his own factory. But he didn't mind saddling him upon the public payroll. Bill ran his factory successfully without a rug or a roll-top desk but found those two articles necessary for a public office.

Roll-top desks and imitation Persian rugs really do not cost much when you buy them by the item for the Department of Commerce or the Court of Appeals. But 1,000,000 desks and rugs are easily traced in your income tax report. A few incompetent relatives really make little difference to the public purse. But when they run into a million and a quarter dollar is added to your taxes you—well, you ought to become the relative of a politician or you ought to join the public's dough in order to pay your taxes.

I'VE heard so often that the automobile industry is the index to the country's prosperity that I swallow the statement line, hook and sinker. Everybody ought to have an automobile and lots of gasolene to run it. The only thing that grouches me is why I should help pay for another man's automobile, especially when he doesn't need one.

Most of the high officials in Washington have automobiles and I know our income tax. I hate to go into details because many friends are involved. The same condition exists in every State and every big city. One automobile doesn't cost much. A few million do. And why any taxpayer should pay his quota of one hundredth of a penny to provide the Speaker of the House with a car is a proposition which puzzles me buffaloed. Often, in many States, it might be better if the Speaker walked, for his health, and didn't arrive at the Capitol.

* * *

THERE isn't a successful business man in the world who would run any government, if it belonged to him, as it is being run today. No business enterprise could succeed if it were run on modern governmental lines.

Wherever you travel in Europe you find a Chilian or Colombian or Brazilian or Argentine consul. The South African republics have a small legation here. Even Uruguay and Afghanistan maintain establishments in Rome. A good business man could handle nine-tenths and run the rest for $20 a week.

It's the same game the world over. Jobs for brothers-in-law and roll-top desks. With salaries attached. And the suckers pay.

Of course if you fired them all you'd add to the unemployed. That's another thought. I take everything back. Let's all go on the public payroll.

Solace

THE shoe-shine man never sees a face
As crowds go passing by;
His world is not of creed or race,
And downcast is his eye.
He sees no head bowed with defeat,
No pause, or limps fine—
He only sees the moving feet
And shoes that lack a shine!

The shoe-shine man ne'er sees the sky
Until the day is done;
But every foot that passes by
He views the dull shoes going past
With an expectant air—
But when he lifts his eyes at last
The world is wondrous fair!

Inventor Puts Young Samuel in Charge of All His Finances; Works Day and Night on Task

In yesterday's installment of the "Life of Samuel Insull" the Boston Evening American described his arrival in America as the secretary of Thomas Alva Edison. The inventor shook hands with the future financial wizard, advised him to go get supper, and cautioned him to hurry back. There was work ahead.

CHAPTER FIVE

'Hurry back—we have a lot to do before morning.'

Such was Thomas A. Edison's greeting to his new secretary immediately after his arrival in New York. A greeting—and a foretaste! Lucky for Insull that he had schooled himself for harder work than most young men could stand—or would tolerate. And lucky for Edison was it that he had employed just the right kind of man to serve him. Not that there was any doubt that Edison quickly appreciated Insull. The inventor described the young man as being 'tireless as an Apache.'

There was a conference that night for dinner and all of Insull's before more than [illegible] on the [illegible] Johnson was to sail for England on a money-raising expedition. Edison expected his new secretary to tell him where the money could be raised.

Surely that was an odd assignment for a secretary. But Insull took it as a matter of course. It was his business to solve, if he could, whatever problems his employer wanted solved. He did wonder, however, one moment, about the 'indefiniteness' of the loan.

"I don't see how you can expect me," he said, "to tell you where to get money unless you tell me just how much you want."

So that had to be figured out, too. Edison knew that he wanted enough to finance his immediate projects in England and on the European continent, and also enough to build four factories in America. One of these was to produce incandescent lamps, another to make dynamos and motors, another for underwire and conductors, and the fourth for switches, sockets and other accessories.

Samuel Insull

Insull Could "Smell" Money From Begining

However much money?

A problem in finance? Did Edison realize even at that early date that Insull's special talents were financial? In any event he ordered the whole program into being. Insull's figuring showed him his financial needs.

"I've got that much cash on hand," he said. The amount was about $70,000.

Prior to [illegible] estimates had been made and Insull had decided a list of probable sources. It was said of him then that he could "smell out money" wherever it was. Many a sad Copperhead was [illegible] that this was true.

How long Insull had to wait for [illegible] sleep after his arrival in America is not quite clear. It certainly did not get it at once. For that financier sees on [illegible] Insull had caught his [illegible] Insull to a meeting with [illegible] who had an iron works for sale. It was on the east side. Edison thought it might serve for the dynamo factory he was going to [illegible]. He and Insull looked it over and decided that it would do.

"And now we go to Menlo Park," Edison announced.

Insull Describes Thrill at Lights

The tireless pair, Edison and Insull, reached Menlo Park at about midnight, an excellent time for the purpose—which was to see the electric lights. Insull has described the experience thus:

"The system employed was naturally the two-wire, as at that time the three-wire had not been thought of. The lamps were part, by all the Sawyer-Man filament paper-carbon type, and partly bamboo filament lamps, and were of an efficiency of 35 to 100 watts per 16-candlepower. I can never forget the impression that this first view of the electric-lighting industry produced on me. Menlo Park must always be looked upon as the birthplace of the electric light and power industry.

"At that time it was the only place where one could see an electric light and power multiple arc distribution system.

"I will remember about 10 o'clock that night going down to the Menlo Park depot and getting the station agent, who was also the telegraph operator, to send cable messages for me to my London friends, announcing that I had seen Edison's incandescent lighting system in actual operation, and that as far as I could tell, it was an accomplished fact. A few weeks afterward I received a letter from one of my London friends, who was a doubting Thomas, upbraiding me for coming so soon under the spell of the 'Yankee inventor.'"

Insull's duties multiplied. For a time he showed an ability to work—and Edison was an observant man. One thing he observed was that Insull was better dressed than he was.

"You better buy my clothes, too," he said.

Edison Gives Him Power of Attorney

Naturally, Insull had the job of opening and classifying all the letters that came to his employer. Many of them he answered on his own responsibility.

"Sign my checks, too," said Edison. "I'll give you a power of attorney." And thus another burden was lifted from the inventor's shoulders. Thanks to Insull he was free to devote almost all of his attention to his laboratory work, which was the only thing he cared much about.

It was the laboratory work, too, that seemed to impress Insull. He never ceased to marvel at the scientific marvels which Edison showed him, and we find him, at the end of his second month in America, writing to an English friend:

"I have seen seven hundred electric lights burning at once! The current for all of them was generated from one dynamo-electric machine, and all of them drew their current from the same mains (i. e., cables) of no less than eight miles in length."

Insull's wonder at such a scene as this was almost child-like. But he had the shrewd view, too—the view of the practical business man, for we find him saying:

"Edison gets eight lights or thereabouts, of 16 candles each, per indicated horsepower, which allows him to compete with gas. He can sell electricity for power purposes by day and for lighting purposes at night, which means that his plant is never idle, his capital is never running to waste, but is always earning money, by night and day alike."

That was perhaps Insull's first statement of the gospel he was later to preach so vigorously—the gospel of the evened-off load, avoiding "peaks" and idle periods.

He was an [illegible]—getting a preview of that "empire" which he was to build and to rule, until it turned and ruined him.

LIEUT.-GOV. GASPAR G. BACON — MAYOR MANSFIELD — SUPT. PATRICK T. CAMPBELL — REV. R. J. QUINLAN

Among the speakers in the great program arranged for the finals of the Metropolitan Spelling Bee sponsored by the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser will be Mayor Frederick W. Campbell, superintendent of the Boston Public School System.

Maurice J. Tobin of the Boston School Board will direct the educational events of the program, and Maurice J. Lacey, president of the Headmasters' Association of the Boston Public School System, will supervise the judges, under whose direction the spell-down to determine the Metropolitan Boston Spelling Champion will be conducted.

Unbounded enthusiasm comes to the 49 champions from the district which they represent after tests which have established their superlative abilities as spellers in competition. Each has an equal chance at the series of distinctions which might very well prove a high point in any boy or girl's life.

The Boston Metropolitan Champion, boy or girl, selected at the conclusion of the thrilling contest at the Boston Garden Saturday afternoon will be rewarded with a solid gold medal, will be introduced to the President of the United States, will spend a delightful vacation at the National Capitol, and will share in the division of $1,750 divided according to accomplishment among the competitors in the National Grade School Spelling Championships in Washington, D. C., on May 29.

In addition this champion, boy or girl, will win for his or her "home" school a beautiful victory trophy which will permanently record the honor of both the pupil and the school. In the competition at Washington the award for the winner of the National Competition is $500; for second place, $300 and third, $100. Furthermore the winner of the national competition is given a beautiful plaque to be placed in the pupil's "home" school, with a miniature of the plaque for the speller personally.

Part of the ceremony on Saturday will be the presentation of orate silver medals to each of the district champions competing in recognition of their splendid achievement in attaining district championships. They are survivors of more than 100,000 children involved in the room, grade and school eliminations of this great contest.

A score of colorful elements are involved in the tense educational struggle to be enacted at the Garden in concluding the local phase of this memorable contest. Nearly a third of the contestants, boys and girls, are of the fifth and sixth grades, having triumphed over more mature spellers in the seventh and eighth grades which were also eligible.

Great honors await the Boston metropolitan champion. They may be borne with dignity by a very small boy or girl.

The final assignment of members to be given each of the competing District Champions so that they may be recognized by the audiences will be published in tomorrow's issues of the Boston Evening American.

OFFICIAL BACKS COUNTY WASTE WAR

This Is Life
ROBERT E. ROGERS

Robert E. Rogers

Yesterday morning an esteemed contemporary printed John Reed's photograph and captioned it with the name "John W. Reed." Are we so soon forgot when we are gone? as Rip Van Winkle pathetically remarked. As a matter of fact John Reed did have a middle initial, although he never used it. But it wasn't W. He signed his early poems and stories in the Harvard Monthly, "John Silas Reed." But he soon grew ashamed of the Silas and dropped it. When he began to write professionally he was plain John Reed—to his friends always Jack.

He used to claim that he was descended from Jan Ridd, the hero of "Lorna Doone," with what right I do not know. I do know that his was a pioneering family of considerable wealth in Oregon and he used to talk about the old family estate where an early ancestor had tried to live like an English country gentleman with coach and four in the wilderness.

He would tell stories of an uncle of his in the navy, how for a time he was king of a savage island somewhere in the Pacific. And he had an old aunt who went round the world at the age of 80 and who was so huge that once she stuck in a bath tub in Shanghai and had to be chiselled out by awe-struck coolies. But Reed's imagination was so fresh and vigorous and fertile that one never knew. His admirations were fervent and exaggerated; he loved life full of color and explosiveness, and his professional journalism, the story of the Colorado strike and his campaign with Villa in Mexico, were often, I suspect, more highly colored than the drab reality. He didn't fake. But he saw things as a poet sees them.

The point of all this is a note in the newspapers to the effect that some Harvard men are planning to put up a tablet on the house in Bow st., near Harvard sq., where he lived three years as an undergraduate. That is interesting when you remember the fact that some years ago his name was deleted from the rolls of Harvard men who had anything to do with the war. This was after he had decisively identified himself with Communism and had died in Moscow and been buried in the Kremlin.

Yet his work as war correspondent was as fine as that of many better known men. He saw the western front and got into trouble there by experimentally firing a rifle from the trenches, an act for which he could have been, by the rules of war, hanged if he were caught. His book on the Balkan front—"The War in the East," I think, illustrated by Boardman Robinson—was exciting and picturesque. And his first hand account of the Bolshevik Revolution, "Ten Days That Shook the World," is a document of chief historical importance and cherished by the Russians as a classic. I believe they have even made a great dramatic spectacle out of it.

I do not believe he was ever an orthodox Communist. He was a poet on the loose, an adventurer in world excitement. In a great many respects he was like Lord Byron—although pleasanter to live with—and his dying in Moscow is as good a parallel as you will to Lord Byron's dying of fever in Greece as a volunteer revolutionist to help free Hellas from the Turks. Byron's idealism was that of the French Revolution, Reed's that of the social revolution born out of his life contacts and his genuine, if impulsive, sympathies for radical labor. His association, in the impressionable years when he was just out of college, with such men as Lincoln Steffens and Big Bill Haywood, and the curious menagerie of reformers and idealists who used to hang round Mabel Dodge's salon determined those sympathies. Occasionally I see one or two of their names as active New Dealers in Washington Howe and Brucre and the like. Still at it.

But what he loved was to be in the midst of things—usually on the unpopular side. In covering the Colorado strike and Villa's revolution he was never impersonal. He wrote as an ardent sympathizer. He became intimate with Villa and shared his caboose. The figure of the reporter in "Viva Villa"—Beery's new picture—was undoubtedly drawn from Reed, even if it was written for Lee Tracy, who is much more in the spirit of Reed than Stuart Erwin. But Reed was not like Tracy, a snapping and troublesome terrier. He was a bigger dog, curly-haired, affectionate, drolly humorous, living and moving in the grand manner, as much without self-consciousness as a man of prototype might be. He loved to be the patron, and his generosities to his friends and even to acquaintances were lavish and off-hand.

He was the sort of man who became a legend even in his lifetime, and that is exactly what he has become. I am morally certain that had he lived long enough, once the excitement of revolution was over in Russia, and life had settled down into a commonplace routine of regimentation, he would have been first bored, then angry, and then violent. He would either have been put out of the way as a counter-revolutionary or escaped to rouse the world against Communism in practice.

He was essentially a poetic Anarchist fighting against the existing organization because it restricted his own and others' freedom. He would have hated Hoover and all his works and marched with the unemployed veterans to Washington. And he would have reported with enormous whoops of laughter the alphabetical complexities of the New Deal. He would have helped Gandhi make salt under the noses of British guns. He would have helped stir up the Chinese radicals against Japan. He would have had so many exciting things to do and to write about that it is a great pity he died so young. Communism was, I am certain, only a momentary halt in his great adventure. But it marked the end of his road.

U. S. LET BANK BOOST STOCK, TRIAL SHOWS

Increase Is Cited at Hearing of Mulloney Charge

J. W. Pole, comptroller of the currency at Washington, on Nov. 15, 1931, twenty-five days before the collapse of the Federal National Bank, permitted the officers and directors of the latter institution to increase its capital stock to $2,005,585, it was revealed to Judge Hugh D. McLellan and a jury in U. S. court today at the trial of Daniel C. Mulloney, indicted president of the bank, by defense counsel Romney Spring.

This fact was also testified to by John T. Morrissey, former vice-president and cashier, under cross-examination by Atty. Spring.

In getting this evidence before the jury Atty. Spring met with opposition from Asst. U. S. Atty.-Gen. Irving G. McGann.

The payroll book sheet of the Federal National was shown Morrissey to check up on his testimony given several days ago concerning Mulloney's salary. According to the record Mulloney received a salary of $50,000 a year from Jan. 1, 1930, to Aug. 31, 1930. In September Mulloney's salary was cut to $45,000 a year.

Two certified checks, one for $6417.50 from the Federal National to F. S. Moseley & Co., Boston brokers, and another for $5837.50, which are among the government's exhibits were identified by Morrissey. The purpose of introducing these checks at this time was to show that Mulloney had covered them at the bank by substantial collateral.

PICK 3 JURORS TO TRY COYNE

Three jurors to try James J. "Siesta" Coyne for the slaying and armed robbery of Charles Solomon, and John T. O'Donnell as an alleged accessory after the fact, were seated today in superior court. A total of 38 veniremen had been called up to this time. The court excused 14 men, six because they were opposed to capital punishment and eight because of opinion.

First three to be seated in the box were Michael Penney, a janitor, of 38 Washington st., Dorchester; Charles E. Lyons, electrician, 97 Horace st., East Boston, and Andrew J. Lyman, leather sorter, 111 Alexander st., Dorchester.

The first venireman declaring himself as opposed to capital punishment was Albert W. Fuller, butcher, of 3 Montgomery st., West Roxbury.

A challenge was called out by O'Donnell after William R Jackson, of 26 Brainerd rd., Brighton, told the court:

"I have always felt it was hardly enough punishment for a man to go to the chair, but if I were convinced he was guilty and should go to the chair, I would send him there."

HODGKINS SEES COST SAVING IN MERGERS

Reps. Kelly and Pratt Press a Probe at State House

Admission by a county commissioner that there is room for considerable improvement in county government was made [illegible] F. Nelson Pratt and Edward J. Kelly [illegible] for an investigation of county government in Massachusetts.

County Commissioner Clarence E. Hodgkins, of Northampton, a Hampshire county official since 1917, declared [illegible] could be [illegible] by consolidation of [illegible] training schools, tuberculosis hospitals and [illegible] and said [illegible] is [illegible] Pratt at the [illegible] today before the committee on counties, with information showing the need for consolidating the 14 counties of the state to five.

FARMS GET AID

Hodgkins said in Hampshire County thousands of dollars are spent annually as an aid to agriculture. Yet cities such as Northampton and Holyoke, who pay taxes for this project, receive no agricultural aid. The same condition exists in many other counties.

Representative Kelley claims that in spite of more than a half-dozen adverse reports on counties no legislative action has ever been taken.

"As far back as 1922," said Kelly, "a report of a committee investigating county government recommended the abolition of training schools yet they continue in existance.

"Another commission, in 1930 branded the confusion of county government and decried the lack of centralization. Again nothing was done.

"The annual report on county finances in 1932 criticized various county expenditures although they were all approved."

COURT BILL DEFEATED

Less than three weeks ago Rep. Kelly introduced a bill to [illegible] the 72 district courts in the state. The bill was defeated.

The same recent legislative rejection of suggestions for county reform occurred in March when the Mass. Taxpayers' Association had its resolve for abolition of counties returned.

Since then the association has dropped the fight but it will be renewed in the fall.

WATER PROBERS BARE INCREASE

The sub-committee of the legislative committee on State administration, probing into expenditures of the Metropolitan District Water Supply Commission and the State Department of Public Works, today switched from land taxation in the Ware and Swift rivers valleys to the new public works building in the North End.

Expenditures to cost around $1,000,000, the building and furnishings, the committee's figures disclosed today, now represent a total outlay of $1,712,732.46.

Architect Graham and Frank E. Lyman and Richard K. Hale, commissioner and associate commissioner of public works, were subjected to a cross-examination. The various contracts for the building and furnishings were also subjected to scrutiny.

O. O. McIntyre
NEW YORK
DAY BY DAY

New York, May 10—Literature's most recent deserter is the white-haired, blue-eyed Carl Van Vechten. Two years ago at the height of his writing career, he pushed aside his typewriter and has not written a line for publication since. That he will ever continue is problematical.

O. O. McIntyre

At the same time he gave up spirituous liquors. Not that the two went together or that he was overly addicted to wassail. He merely decided that for the time being at least he had had enough of each. A novel, well along at the time, was abandoned. Amateur photography is now his hobby.

Born in Cedar Rapids, Ia., Van Vechten's first inclinations were toward music. He became a New York music critic and has authored several compositions. His wife is Fania Marinoff, the sloe-eyed Russian actress, and their apartment was at one time the salon of arts and letters.

Later Van Vechten grew fascinated with life in Harlem, became its most famous white visitor and recorded some of his impressions in his best seller, "Nigger Heaven." He is regarded by feline fanciers as most informed on cats. His "Tiger in the House" is a standard work.

There is a certain mental hyssop for the stroller in hunting for the typically American face among the crowds. Such a face is almost a rarity. As it is rare when found, it is that of an out-of-towner, usually one suspects the middle west. Perhaps the most typical American face, according to experts, is that of Walter Johnson, the baseball player. He was born in Kansas and is one of those fellows who wouldn't have to announce he was a Yank along the Strand or Place de l'Opera.

Down among the evening soap boxers fringing Madison Square the other evening, a hot gospeler was high tonsiling to prove that everything came from the earth and no group had a right to monopolize it. In pointing out the virtues of the soil, the trees the wheat etc. etc., he screamed in tremulous ecstasy: "My friends what doesn't come from the earth?" A passing smart alec through a taxi window shouted "Fish!" and raced on.

And there is Montague Glass's story of the cockney speaker on his portable platform at the entrance to Hyde Park. Mounting his rostrum, he looked benignly over the small knot at his feet and purred: "I shall now discuss the milk of human kindness!" A heckler called out: "Condense it!"

* * *

Another writer who has, like Van Vechten, made a hobby of photography, is Bob Davis. His collection of 100 celebrity faces is regarded as the finest work of its kind in America. He has a way of catching his subject off guard and giving the photograph an informality few have achieved. In the average photograph there is a consciousness that there is a camera around. By the magic of some hocus pocus Davis makes his subjects forget this. He will make only two prints—one for himself and the other a guerdon for the sitter. The collection has been willed to the Metropolitan Museum.

TAKE MOTHER OUT OF KITCHEN -:- LIVING IN PAST IS STARVATION DIET

Given in Marriage

By Adele Garrison

Despite Madge's Protest, Edith Insists on Telling of Dicky's "Escapade" With the Girl, "Floss"

EDITH FAIRFAX had been leaning forward in her chair, her eyes fairly scathing attack upon my apparent indifference to the news she was bringing me about Dicky and the mysterious girl named "Floss." But when I said quietly, "Suppose you tell me about it," she slumped back against the chair back, and seemed to shrink into herself. I think that my quiet query was something like a pin prick in the balloon of her excitement, and that for a moment she saw herself as others saw her.

I think I was equally aghast at myself. In order to calm her I had said, "Suppose you tell me about it," when in reality I meant anything but that. I never have talked of Dick's affairs and mine to anyone outside our own family circle, which always, of course, included the Underwoods, and I have been reticent even with them regarding many things. But to talk of a person like "Floss" in connection with my husband, above all to speak of her to a woman who, I knew, was in love with him—I suddenly knew to be impossible.

MADGE WON'T LISTEN

I started to tell her this, but she forestalled me.

"I suppose you think I'm crazy," she said dully, "and I suppose I am. But I cannot sit by and see Dicky make a complete fool of himself over that—that—"

"Stop!" I said sternly, and as she looked up, startled, I rushed on:

"I am the one who is crazy," I said. "I must have been perfectly mad when I asked you to tell me about this just now. I can listen to nothing against Dicky from you or anyone else. Please forget that I asked you to tell me about it. This is all distinctly none of my business, Edith."

"Madge!" She was on her feet, and in her white face and her burning eyes there had come an expression which held a ghastly resemblance to hope. "Do you mean, you can't mean, that you and Dicky have come to the parting of the ways at last, and that what he does no longer concerns you?"

EDITH'S LOVE FOR DICKY

I could not forbear a countering question.

"Would that please you, Edith?" I asked icily.

She looked at me steadily.

"Why pretend, you and I?" she asked, with a bitter sneer twisting her lips. "We have hated each other for years. If we were less civilized, we'd be at each other's throats, or sending each other poisoned candy. Of course, I'd be glad if I knew you and Dicky were at the end of things. Not that it would do me any good in the present state of things," she added despondently. Then she shot the question at me again:

"Are you and Dicky at the end?" she asked.

"I'm sorry to disappoint you," I said, for it was not in human feminine nature to keep venom from my voice and words, and I knew that apparently a calm posture would infuriate her most. "But my husband and I are on the most amicable terms possible. Really I am very much ashamed of myself for listening to even so small a thing against him. Whatever grievance you have against this young woman named 'Floss,' you must take up with her. I can have nothing to do with it—do not wish to know anything about it."

MADGE IS HELPLESS

She sprang to her feet.

"So that's your game, is it?" she said, pausing by my couch and glancing down at me. "You'll be complacent toward this common creature, Floss, because in your high and mighty way you don't fear her. You're sure Dicky will be too fastidious to look at her, and you also figure that I, whom you always have feared—and with reason, old dear; never forget that—will emasculate Dicky beyond recall by showing my jealousy of this unspeakable girl.

"Well, I'm not going to let you get away with that pose, as far as I'm concerned. You can't get away from that couch, and I'm going to tell you all I know about this girl and Dicky. For you can't fool me. You never could love Dicky as I do. It isn't in you. You're prouder than Lucifer, but a matter of pride is going to be proud of your handsome husband when I tell you of some of the tricks he has recently pulled."

A TIMELY INTERRUPTION

The house telephone rang, and as if the sound had taken her by the throat, she stopped and stared at it.

"Will you please answer it?" I asked quietly. "I can't move from the couch."

She waited an instant, evidently wavering; then convention pulled too hard for her and she went to the telephone.

"Yes," she said. Then, her face dark, she turned to me.

"Mrs. Underwood says Mr. Vertiaen is downstairs and she wants to know when you will be able to see him?"

I looked at her steadily—

"Will you please say to her," I directed, "that I am ready to see him now."

Daily Suggestion for Self-Improvement

It is correct to eat canapes with the fingers only if they are served at an afternoon tea or at cocktails. Knives and forks must be used when they are served at table during dinner.

Let Her Day Be One of Rest and Fun

By Martha Lee

SUNDAY is Mother's Day and of course you'll want to plan to do something for her. You probably are giving her some very expensive gift, but here is our suggestion for a most acceptable one. Relieve her of all the household duties for the day. Plan a special dinner for her. Take her to some hotel or tea room she has always longed to go to, so that she will not have to think of the details of food preparation for that one day in the year at least. If you have no mother living of your own, plan to do something for some one else's mother, because regrettable as it is, not all mothers are remembered who should be.

It would be particularly nice, with these warm spring days so enjoyable, to plan an all-day motor ride and picnic. The choice of food is not difficult. Just remember that out-door appetites are always keener and it will take more food to satisfy. A variety of cold meats and relishes can be easily packed and carried, and you might even go so far as to take the ingredients for a salad along. Pack it in a jar with ice cubes, and then make it up when you get to the picnic grounds.

Here are two menu suggestions for picnic—one of cold dishes and th eother including a hot soup:

Refrigerator Meat Loaf Sandwiches
Stuffed Eggs
Assorted Cold Meats Rolls
Sweet Pickles
Mayonnaise and Chili Sauce
Saratoga Potatoes
Individual Cherry or Apple Pies
Coffee (in thermos)

Cream of Mushroom Soup (in thermos)
Crackers
Cold Fried Chicken
Genuine Dill Pickles
Sliced Ham Rolls
Tomato Ketchup
Potato or Brazilian Cabbage Salad
Chocolate Cake or Cup Cakes with Peanut Butter Frosting
Fruit Coffee

REFRIGERATOR MEAT LOAF

To 2¼ cups of cold cooked veal or pork, add ½ cup of sweet mustard pickle and grind finely. Add ¾ tsp. salt, ¼ tsp. pepper, and 4 tbsps. melted butter. Blend thoroughly and pack firmly into a pan lined with waxed paper. Place overnight in refrigerator, slice thinly and make into sandwiches, using whole wheat bread and placing a lettuce leaf in each sandwich. Slices of tomato may also be added, if desired.

Clever Umbrella Handle Hides Ann Sothern's Rubbers

PREPARING for a rainy day means getting together an ensemble with a novel and a bright touch for Ann Sothern. She finds this little umbrella no trouble at all, and a grand help in a sudden shower, especially if she is wearing a pair of favorite shoes, for a pair of rubbers is rolled up and concealed in the leather handle. Her knitted ensemble is in gray, powder and royal blue, with accents of red.

Give Love a Second Chance Even If Your Heart Needs Binding Up

By Marguerite Mooers Marshall

THE FIRST ROSE on a bush, the first love that flowers in a girl's heart, may be two of the most beautiful creations produced by nature.

But sometimes the first rose is blighted before it blooms. Then does the rosebush trail its leaves in the dust and refuse to produce another blossom? Not if it's a healthy plant worth a place in any pretty girl's garden! A second blossom soon appears, as red, as golden-hearted, as royally fragrant as the first was NOT.

You may have read, the other day, a true love story in the news, a story as faintly colored and evanescently fragrant as a violet long pressed between the pages of a book. In Philadelphia Miss Alice S. Pyncheon died at eighty-eight, leaving the request that a package, wrapped and sealed in her room, be placed unopened in her coffin. A friend explained that the package contained love letters which, at 18, Miss Pyncheon had received from the boy she loved.

Just before their wedding he died. She saw no one for six months. Then she went to work teaching school, but she continued to regard the entire male sex as non-existent.

MOURNED 70 YEARS

Seventy years of her life she mourned her girlhood lover, read and re-read with tear-wet eyes his yellowing letters.

In a charming story, Sophia Kerr has a wise comment on such a tragically faithful attachment:

"There's something fine and something terrible too in the way she refused to console herself, to replace her lost love. Most people make adjustments, take up small things in the place of the one great thing they have lost, but she wouldn't do it. I don't think she was wise. But I do think there's something high and grand about it. Few people have the strength to live by illusions."

That's the answer. For a woman's loving heart "to live by illusions," to feed forever on the dead memories of passion, is altogether too much of an ordeal for most of us—and unfortunately so. It is a drain on vitality, a menace to safety. And it is starvation diet for happiness. Remember the casket of rhyme, in "The Merchant of Venice":

"Some there be that shadows kiss—

A ROMANTIC PLATFORM

A much better romantic platform may be expressed in an adaptation of another familiar jingle, as follows:

If at first you don't succeed,
Love, love again!
Time will bring you your reward!"

When your beloved, or his passion, dies, don't make your mourning perpetual. Instead, make adjustments to your world and the people in it. Bind up your broken heart and give second love a chance. For life, remember, is for the living—and for the LOVING!

Green Is Favored

WHY IS IT that American girls always stick to the age-old custom of wearing brown? It dulls their hair and does not do justice to their complexions. Green gives a beautiful apricot tint to the skin of a red-head. Black and dark blue will also suit her as it suits all types. Sherry tints are sometimes favored.

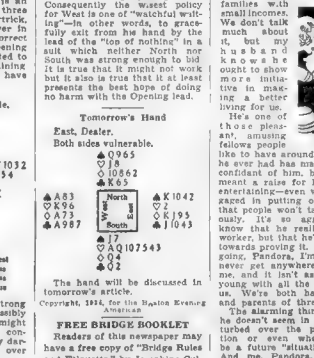
Correct Lead Clinches Game

By Josephine Culbertson

I have often discussed the importance of the opening lead. The choice of the correct suit, and in some cases even the correct card in the suit, often determines the success or failure of the contract. When partner has bid, often the burden is lifted from the shoulders of the opening leader, and, lacking another and better choice, he leads, as a matter of course, the suit named by his partner. However, when the only bidding has been by the adversaries and a game contract at notrump has been reached after possibly only one suit has been shown, it is wise for the leader to consider all the elements of bidding, the bids that were not made as well as those that were, in connection with his own holding before choosing the suit or the card.

There are some players, notably Mr. Walter Malowan, who seek to so direct the bidding that the eventual contract is the hardest of all for their adversaries to successfully defend. There is something, no doubt, in this view, and the hand below is an example of a contract of three notrump made with an overtrick, which contract, if the player in the West had made the correct and logical choice of an Opening lead, or even if he had shifted to the right suit after regaining the lead, must inevitably have been defeated.

North, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1◇	Pass	1NT	Pass
2◇	Pass	2NT	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

The bidding is slightly strong by North and South, but possibly a little timid by East, who might have prevented the same contract had he made a slightly daring Overcall of one spade over the Opening diamond bid.

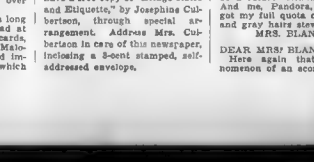
The West player studied a long time before making any lead at all, and eventually, of all cards, chose the club Queen. Mr. Malowan won with the Ace and immediately returned a club, which East won with the King. East now returned a heart, which West won with the Ace, returning a heart. Had West, even at this point, shifted to a spade it would not have been too late. However, on the play of the heart South won with the Queen and entered Dummy to establish his fourth suit. West, taking the club Knave, finally shifted to a spade, but the ship had sailed. Declarer won five diamonds, two clubs, two hearts and one spade to fulfill his contract with an overtrick.

Some players might say that the choice of a lead is not clearly indicated but, as a matter of fact, it is. In the first place the club Opening is very bad. It might quite easily, on the bidding, deprive West of any club trick whatever. The diamond lead cannot be recommended as North has rebid the suit and South's bid of two notrump over two diamonds clearly indicates some kind of fit.

The heart does not suggest itself as a strong Opening either. Consequently the wisest policy for West is one of "watchful waiting"—in other words, to gracefully exit from his hand by the lead of the "top of nothing" in a suit which neither North nor South was strong enough to bid. It is true that it might not work but it also is true that it at least presents the best hope of doing no harm with the Opening lead.

Tomorrow's Hand

East, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

By Ann Sothern

I HAVE DISCOVERED that my rainy day troubles have been greatly solved by this trick umbrella in which I can carry my rubbers tucked neatly away in the circular handle with button flap.

Nothing is so messy on the day Jupiter Pluvius has his innings as to get one's shoes muddy and damp, and one cannot always tell when the streets will become wet on an uncertain cloudy day. With this novel contrivance one can always be prepared and still not be inconvenienced by having to pack along the all-necessary rubbers. The handle is so compact that no one would suspect that it contains a handy pair of rubbers. In fact, this type of handle allows for a good grip on the umbrella. It is so symmetrical it harmonizes with the shape, the rest of the umbrella and is entirely inconspicuous.

I find the knitted attire I am wearing with the mid gauntlet gloves to match is a warm and smart looking garb for overcast days. The color scheme is gray, powder and royal blue. The novel clasp at the throat as well as at the waist are modernistic pointed ornaments made of composition and of a bright red color. They set off the other colors and adds a bright, cheery color scheme for a gloomy day. With attire such as this, I can feel equal to Jupiter Pluvius and retain that chic style so necessary to the well dressed person.

My position as an actress keeps me on the alert to feel out and get the latest styles in dress as well as such novel things as the umbrella shown

Pandora Tells You

DEAR PANDORA:

The most irritating thing in my married life is our struggle for existence, but I suppose this is so in most families with small incomes. We don't talk much about it, but my husband knows he ought to show more initiative in making a better living for us.

He's one of those pleasant, amusing fellows people like to have around. Every boss he ever had has made a pal and confidant of him, but it's never meant a raise for him. He's so entertaining—even when he's engaged in putting over a deal—that people won't take him seriously. It's so aggravating to know that he really is a good worker, but that he'll do nothing towards proving it. He so easy-going, Pandora, I'm afraid he'll never get anywhere. It worries me, and it isn't as if we were young with all the world before us. We're both half-past forty and parents of three children.

The alarming thing about it is he doesn't seem in the least disturbed over the present situation or even whether there'll be a future "situation" for him. And me, Pandora, I've already got my full quota of crow's feet and gray hairs stewing over it.

MRS. BLANCHE McG.

DEAR MRS. BLANCHE McG:

Here again that same phenomenon of an economically upset wife and a comparatively comfortable husband. Some years ago, I talked with a university professor who had conducted a marriage research involving two hundred men and women, all married but not all to one another. A little more than half of the men who answered the questions were married to women who were also taking part in the research. Out of the fifty-five wives whose husbands answered the questions about financial friction, eleven said unqualifiedly that there was "much friction on account of money. Only two of the husbands were aware of it, and three more heeded.

I could bore you to death with these statistics, but I'll compromise by telling you they all add up to show that women are much more tense about money matters, much more sensitive and apprehensive than any mere man would ever dream. Bad thing, Blanche, ought to have been spanked out of us generations ago. All it has ever gotten us, as you yourself have confessed, is crowsfeet and gray hairs. Seems to me when we've married a certain type of individual we humans ought to realize we can't mold him into the antithesis of all he represents. Encourage your husband; yes, subtly flatter him into believing he is what he ain't. But don't delude yourself, Blanche, into believing that you can make a tycoon out of a truckman by the mere magic of your nagging.

Courtesies Shown to Elders

By MRS. BEECKMAN

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When meeting a woman who is older than one's self, for the first time, should the younger one rise? To stand or not to stand depending on the age of the person you are meeting is quite delicate. When should it be done so as not to offend anyone by making them feel old? I am twenty-five years of age.

You are right . . . this is a question that never seems to be solved. Every new introduction demands a quick thought and decision as to whether or not we should rise.

When a man is introduced to a woman, she definitely doesn't rise, unless the man is an elderly distinguished gentleman to whom she wishes to show special honor. When you are introduced to a woman of about your age, you needn't rise, although, of course, you may, if you wish.

But concerning this question of your rising when you are introduced to an older woman, only a superficial minded woman would interpret this gracious compliment unattractively. If, when we rise to acknowledge an introduction, we make the other person "feel old," then there must be something the matter with our rising and with the manner and mode of our acknowledgement. If we have a fixed idea in our minds that we want to abolish that will be taken by the other person, then of course we bring about that attitude. But if our manner be an "accustomed" one, if we are gracious in the way we rise and the words we say in acknowledgment, then this is reflected and the other person realizes the compliment.

So, dear friend, cultivate your own graciousness of manner so that it will inevitably be correctly and charmingly interpreted and everyone whom you meet will say, "What a charming person she is . . . so well-bred and gracious!"

'BEAUTY BATH' USED BY SIREN NINON GIVES SKIN SATINY TEXTURE

Revitalizing and Refreshing as Spring Rain After Long, Hot Day

By Juliet Shelby

IF YOU WANT TO FEEL as rich as Croesus—though you may not have a penny in the bank—try that benediction of beauties . . . the luxury-beauty bath. It's the perfect answer to hot-weather unrest, and is as exhilarating as a champagne cocktail.

That famous siren of the past, the exquisite Ninon de l'Enclos, first discovered this beauty bath. It is magically revitalizing and makes your skin a satin-textured thing of beauty.

Most women can sidestep a few necessities to attain loveliness, since beauty is their natural heritage. Here, however, is a luxury, refreshing as a spring shower, that is within the purse range of all.

* * *

A famous dermatologist once told me that women were forever asking him how to have that mysterious charm that some women acquire, so subtle that you are hardly aware of it when they enter the room, yet it wafts toward you and completely snares you in a very short time. "Why think, some of them," said he, "that if they take their daily bath and dab a bit of perfume back of their ears, this can be accomplished. But let me tell you, it isn't.

* * *

"Women who seek that elusive something cannot depend on perfume alone. After their bath comes a whole procession of oils and fragrance and powders."

Charm such as Ninon's cannot be acquired in minutes, or months or years. But the secret she used for attaining lasting loveliness throughout her life is now your's for the asking.

Nothing is quite so refreshing to spirits and bodies after a long wearisome day as a bath, pungent with salts from the sea and scents from the mysterious East.

There are many enchanting bath oils and essences on the market and they all are good, too. Some are very expensive—others are less so. But if you are really interested in trying out the great Ninon's own method, I will be glad to hand it to you.

It comes to you exactly as she used it more than 200 years ago, and if proof of her beauty isn't enough of a guarantee, then I would advise you to pass it up. You probably wouldn't be satisfied, anyway. But if you share half the enthusiasm I do for this truly remarkable beauty bath you'll include it in your list of necessities rather than luxuries.

* * *

If you would like to know the ingredients of this luxury bath and how you can prepare it, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Juliet Shelby, Beauty Editor, Boston Evening American, and I will be glad to give you completes directions for taking and making the bath.

Proper Care of Scalp and Hair

Question: My hair is very oily. I shampoo it every three weeks and brush it ten minutes each night, yet I see no improvement in the condition of my scalp.
H. T. O., Lincoln.

Answer. Weekly shampoos are absolutely necessary to keep hair of your type soft and shiny. Add a small quantity of borax to the melted soap solution the next time you wash your hair. Three soapings and four rinsings are not too much when hair is oily.

* * *

Ugly Knees

Question: Can you suggest anything to correct ugly looking knees? I have noticed that mine are getting bony and are inclined to be knock-kneed. Do you think exercise has anything to do with it?
T. E., South Boston.

Answer: Walking would never cause your knees to develop ugly lines. Either your posture is faulty or you are not wearing the correct kind of shoes. Do you know that spiked heels sometimes cause knees to swing from side to side, in much the same manner as a hinge in the center of a lever? Try wearing low heels for a while, particularly when walking.

* * *

Sallow Skin

Question: My complexion is very sallow. I have tried various shades of powder but they all seem too light for my skin. I have tried bleaches also and while freckles have vanished I haven't been able to get rid of the sallow tone.
W. E., East Milton.

Answer: You are chasing a phantom if you are attempting to hide your sallow complexion behind a mask of powder. The cause of your trouble is doubtless faulty elimination or improper digestion. A balanced diet, an active intestinal tract, plenty of water and daily exercise is the best treatment I know. Bleaches, used faithfully, will clear the white surface of tan and freckles, but they can't do more than that.

Knows Value of Beauty Bath

AN ATTACK of spring ennui can be nipped in the bud if you will try this beauty bath used by Ninon de l'Enclos, the exquisite beauty, whose loveliness has been the envy of cultured ladies down through the centuries. Although knighthood no longer flowers, you'll capture some of the romantic charm of her era with this refreshing, revitalizing bath. Ruth Hillard of the motion pictures, knows that nothing is quite so soothing to weary spirits and bodies after a long, hot day as a cooling bath. Today Juliet Shelby tells how you yourself may prepare Ninon's "luxury bath"—a secret handed down to you more than 200 years after her death.

"You're odd."

"Perhaps." He regarded her with intent and glowing eyes. "I didn't know I could care in this way. didn't realize how much you meant."

Pippin said, lured by his ardor yet vaguely alarmed.

I don't want to mean so much to you. If you go on like this I won't be able to see you any more."

"Yes, you will!"

"You don't know me, Dale. I mean what I say. I'm not committing myself to love you, I don't intend to love you or anyone!"

A warm red smile flashed over his lips.

"That's all right. I'm not asking you to love me. But I want to paint your picture as you looked when you came down that path. I want to remember it—make sure it happened!"

He saw the flush stain along her throat and said slowly, sobered. "Of course you don't love me. Why should you?"

He took out a cigarette, puffed idly. "Nice to return. Foggy in town—gray drizzle sweeping in from the ocean every afternoon. Did you take any good hikes while I was gone?"

A STRANGE FELLOW

"No—but we got up swimming and boat races. I swam this lake but none of us could make the lower."

"Glad I missed that chilly business. You got that fish ancestors. I brought you that book about Henri Gaudier. You'll find it rather interesting. I'll get it."

Dale returned with the book. He went through it in a pleasant, casual way just as he talked to Kate Stone.

When he talked in this impersonal pleasant way, Pippin felt at ease. Glad he was back; glad to be sitting with him in the warm afternoon sun, the water sparkling.

Dale asked: "How did you happen to be passing this way?"

"I came deliberately to see if you'd returned."

There followed a week when Pippin alternately fumed against Dale and longed for him. He gave her such scant attention.

He made pictures of Dadee's girl and said what a cute trick she was.

"So paintable with that dark, vivid color and sharp piquant features?"

"Are you using her for your illustrations?"

GYPSY IN HEART

He answered carelessly as though not aware of the tight little voice in which Pippin spoke.

"No—but she's a gypsy in heart as well as looks."

Irene tirted with Dale. She [illegible] he wanted to be a boulder and said "Can you sketch me here?"

"Then come and lift me down!"

It was the first dance to which Pippin had gone all summer long; her first dance in four months.

He pulled her to him. His black eyes winked and he sang softly, challenging: "Oh hum, feeling like a feather. Ho hum, we're together!"

"What is?"

"This night, the moon outside, trees near the water—You!"

"It sounds like poetry, Dale."

"I could make a poem, or live a poem—with you!"

They stole outside, down through a thin grove of trees to the water's edge. The lake was quiet.

"It's been a lonely week, Pippin."

She answered absently: "Yes—lonely."

"You thought so, too?"

He had his arm about her and now drew her close.

"Don't worry. I won't trouble you. I can keep to myself. You see that. I'm not so pleasant! Pippin, it won't hurt you if I love you a little. Now and then. Just a little. You don't mind if I kiss you—please. Just once?"

She glanced up, felt, rather than saw the dark demand in his eyes. She stood motionless, a tumult in her heart. He kissed her.

"I wish you'd give me a little hope. I could easily want a certain. I've never loved anyone before—as this. I'd like to have you right now. I wish I could! I didn't know I'd been here so long. I have been, Pippin. It's not that you care a little! You like to be here in my arms."

His words made a swift warm river down which she floated in a strangely sweet, half frightened dream.

She said: "I don't know. Let me go, Dale." Yet felt powerless to move, while in every sense went a little throb of joy.

HIS ARM AROUND HER

One day they decided on an over-night trip. Kate Stone and Blanche Woodman were hiking to Fallen Leaf Lake. They were camping there. They asked Dale, who was a good woodsman and Pippin to go with them.

They got their supplies ready. They were greatly excited. They planned to start about ten in the morning.

At nine, Pippin saw Dale coming up the trail from their pier. She went down to meet him.

"What's the matter?"

"I've just driven over to the store. I met Kate there. She was buying adhesive tape. Her friend has sprained her ankle."

"The trip is off?" Pippin asked in a blank, crushed tone.

He came up and took Pippin's hand.

"Why can't we go alone, Pippin?"

She turned white.

He went on: "We can make it there and back before dark."

"Oh no! We never could."

"We can! I know we can."

She looked at him with parted lips and wide brilliant eyes.

"All right. I'll be ready. I'll meet you in the trees above your cabin."

He leaned down quickly and kissed her.

"I'll start there. Make it in an hour."

Club Work Thrives in Rural Sections

Concord, N. H., May 10—Young people in rural areas take more interest in club work, Mrs. Frank P. Bennett, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Women's Clubs, said because they have fewer other diversions. The said junior club work flourished in the rural rather than the urban sections.

Many Children Underfed

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

NEW DEAL FOR DENTISTS IS PRAISED

By PEGGY DOYLE

Dentistry's new deal is preventative dentistry, it was declared today at the Hotel Statler by Dr. Walter C. Miner of 675 Commonwealth ave., as the four-day 70th annual meeting of the Massachusetts Dental Society moved to a close.

The greatest discoveries in dentistry in the future, he said, will come from the biological chemists.

Dentists are coming to realize that the teeth are part of the body and that food makes teeth as well as tissue and bone.

Revealing that only 25 per cent of the people in the nation visit dentists, Dr. Miner said:

"The new deal in dentistry is preventive dentistry. It is a little too early yet to hope to have a dentist on your payroll and go to him regularly for inspection, but that is the idea and the hope.

"It is the aim of the dental profession that people will visit their dentists for a regular three-monthly dental examination and an annual X-ray examination.

"Dentists are optimistic over such a plan, because it will lead to patients more income and a better health. As it is now, only 25 per cent of the people in the United States visit dentists.

"It will lead also to younger bodies. At present the majority of people miss the good in food because it has been so highly cooked and processed. When people begin to think of food not as something that tastes good, but as something that will keep their tissues young, we will have a younger race."

Dr. W. W. Marvel of Fall River, director of the post-graduate courses of the Dental Society, revealed that enrollment in last winter's course in preventative dentistry and the chemical knowledge of the body exceeded by nearly 600 per cent the anticipations of the organization.

When an enrollment of not more than 25 was expected, there were 170 dentists who signed up for the course, he said.

"And all these men," he added, "were older men who have been in the profession for many years."

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. They should pour out thru the bladder 3 pints of fluid a day, which contains 4 pounds of waste matter.

If you have trouble with too frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints every day and get rid of 4 pounds of waste matter, your body will take up these poisons causing serious trouble. Don't keep your system up for many months. Don't wait. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS — a doctor's prescription . . . which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out the 15 MILES of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs or so-called "kidney cures" that claim to fix you up in 24 minutes. Your common sense will tell you that the is impossible. Treatments of this nature may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS . . . the old reliable relief that contains no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

REED WILL RUN FOR SENATE

Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc

Chicago, May 10—"Fightin' Jim" Reed of Missouri has announced his intention to run again for United States Senator from his state.

Reed, with his bride, the former Nell G. Donnelly, nationally known dress manufacturer, had a tussle with the NRA regulators at Washington.

The former "Cicero" of the Senate has been ripmad a lot of times in his colorful life. But he probably was never quite so angry. He declared.

"When I voluntarily left the Senate in 1928 no prospect would have tempted me to run again.

"I don't know that I can make the grade this time, but by the great Jehovah, some one has got to tell the people of these United States what is happening to them. These Bolsheviks at Washington have got us by the throat."

Farm Leaders Bid to Market Parley

Petitions Opposing League Bare Sacrifice of War

They tell a story of sacrifice and anguish.

For accompanying the signatures was a little note from Joseph Marix. It read

"I lost one son in the World War, I think that is enough."

To prevent this kind of thing from happening again is one of the reasons why the Boston Evening American and associated Hearst newspapers are conducting a campaign against America taking part in foreign affairs.

Mr. Marix's pathetic letter is but one of the many that are received by the local World Court Petition Editor every day.

Maybe you did not have a dear one in the Great Struggle, but you also may feel that America should not mix in European politics.

If you do, then sign the petition blank issued by the associated Hearst newspapers which is printed from time to time in the Boston Evening American.

You also may obtain these blanks by writing or calling the local petition editor at 5 Winthrop Square, telephone Liberty 6700.

JAPS WARN ON CHINA POLICY

By Associated Press.

Tokio, May 10—Japan today gave advance notice of a probable warning to both China and the League of Nations as to "the advisability of suspension" of Dr. Ludwig Rajchman's plans for financial aid to China by the League.

The warning was regarded as a step toward effectuating the "Hands-off-China" policy which Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister, enunciated April 17 and which resulted in immediate diplomatic inquiries in Tokio by the governments of Great Britain, the United States and France.

BANK PAYOFF NEARS VOTE

By Universal Service

Washington, May 10—Despite a presidential injunction against all bank pay-off legislation, the House banking and currency committee is determined to bring out the Steagall measure for partial payment of depositors in closed national banks.

The President, it was learned, told Chairman Steagall at a conference early this week to bring out immediately the administration measure extending the temporary provisions of the deposit insurance bill and to kill the pay off rider Steagall attached to the bill.

The committee however, expects to report the insurance extension with its payoff amendment Monday.

The insurgent membership expects also to increase the temporary guarantee from $2500 to $5000 until January 1 and to $10,000 from January 1 to July 1, 1935. The President asked for a $2500 limit.

Meanwhile, the forces behind the McLeod full payoff bill need only 32 additional names on a petition to insure a vote on the original bank relief measure May 28.

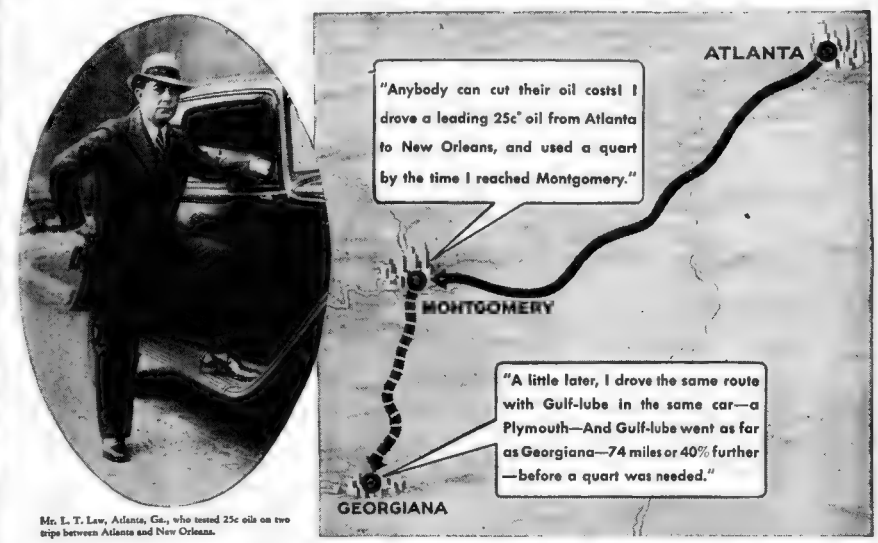
"YES SIR! I CHECKED UP ON 25c* MOTOR OILS"



Mr. L. T. Law, Atlanta, Ga., who tested 25c oils on two trips between Atlanta and New Orleans.

NOBODY can tell me it makes no difference which 25c* oil you buy," says Mr. L. T. Law, Atlanta, Ga. "I've proved that one of them can save you money!

"I tested two of the leaders myself. Tested one oil on a drive from Atlanta to New Orleans. And tested the other on a second trip over the same route.

"Gulf-lube went 40% more miles per quart! It went 74 miles further than the competing oil before a quart was consumed. Yes sir, Gulf's 'high mileage' motor oil is saving me money!"

Stop buying so much oil between oil changes! Stop saying, "Give me a quart of oil" so often. WOMEN SOUGHT IN BOND THEFT

Four negotiable bonds valued at $4000 were missing from her pocketbook after she had been footled by two women yesterday afternoon in a downtown store, Mrs D. L. Weeks, of 401 Main st., Waltham, reported to police today. One was a blonde, about 25, and the other was about 60 years old, Mrs. Weeks said.

Mrs. Weeks said she had taken the bonds, issued by the Chesapeake Corporation, from her deposit box at the brokerage firm of Burr-Gannett and Co., of 53 State st. Lieut. Benjamin Wall, of the detective bureau, was assigned to investigate.

HULTMAN FAITH SPURS HUNT

Asserting her faith that Police Commissioner Hultman will find her missing husband single-handed, Mrs. Hazel Tibbetts Flye, 23, of Franklin st., Holbrook, refused today to give out a description of Thorndyke Flye, 25, wealthy automobile dealer, who vanished several days ago.

The young wife, mother of one child, has declined even to ask aid of the Holbrook police, they said today, but she and his mother made a direct appeal to Commissioner Hultman, a friend of the family.

Touching Tale of Burleigh Grimes' Slippery Elm Tree

Final Passing of Last Synthetic Pitcher in Majors

By AUSTEN LAKE

If there is a paradise for tree-souls, or any form of arboreal immortality, there is a place in some heavenly glade for the little elm which paid the final, supreme sacrifice for Burleigh Grimes last winter. And there may be a link between the passing of that little tree and the fact that old Burleigh is going to get his discharge from the St. Louis Cardinals soon and, maybe, end his pitching career.

Austen Lake

In the old, boyhood day when Burleigh was a small, barefoot lad in Clear Lake, Wis., the little elm, which was a slippery elm whose bark was much favored for chewing by the junior gentry, stretched its leafy arms over a water brook where small Burleigh used to sit on warm summer days and fish for perch and mudcats with a length of grocer's twine.

As Burleigh grew older and picked up the art of pitching spit balls, he always whittled his stock of chewing splinters from the little tree. And over the years, as he worked gradually through the barefoot leagues into the majors, he would send back word when he needed more slobber-slivers, and a friend would go out and gouge off another supply.

Pathetic End of a Boyhood Pal

Naturally this did the little tree's health no good, and it grew wan and worried as time went by. Because Burleigh would never buy slippery elm from the drug stores, where it is usually kept in jars next to odorous chemicals which flavor the wood and induces nausea. Being a connoisseur, and superstitious besides, Burleigh would use no other than the living flesh of his boyhood chum, the little tree.

He claimed, too, that he could master a creamier lather with which to smear his spit-balls, which is a nasty word, and that they would make queerer leaps and hops, as is their nature, when doctored with his favorite mixture. So that, in large measure, he owed his success and longevity to the little elm.

It was a life of loving sacrifice and a career of unselfish devotion that the little tree led, and perhaps it rustled with pride when Burleigh piled up one victory after another, and felt that its personal bark had not been shed in vain. But the constant amputation finally sealed its fate, so that one day the haggard, little elm curled up its roots, quivered and died.

And last winter there came a whistling norther that blew down its dry corpse which floated away in the stream where Burleigh had fished for perch and mudcats.

The Last of the Freak Ball Throwers

This was the pathetic tale which Burleigh, who is now fat, 40 and paunchy, related last spring when I visited him in the Cardinals' training camp at Bradenton. Even then, while being forced to buy drugstore stocks of the masticating chips and feeling the first pangs of nausea, he seemed to see an augury in the little tree's death and that it presaged the finish of his own career.

The drug store brand of elm was dry and barren and did not work into the juicy paste required to make his pitches swoop and dive properly. And he complained that he had to chew such a lot of the disgusting stuff that his digestive chemistry had become upset and his power was slipping.

So, I am not surprised to learn that the Cardinals are fixing to shoo him away and back to the barefoot leagues, so that pretty soon the last of the spitball pitchers will pass over the horison and the art will become legendary. Yet I cannot help but feel that if Burleigh had been kinder to the little elm in life and whittled its flesh more sparingly, it might have survived to keep Burleigh in his profession.

With his passing will go the last trace of freak pitching, which was ruled off as a pernicious danger when Ray Chapman, the Cleveland shortstop, was killed by Carl Mays' sailball in 1920. Previously the boys had been carrying blacksmith's rasps and a full kit of carpenter's tools onto the mound, concealed about their persons, and they would hack and chisel rough spots on the ball that made it do weird and drunken antics.

That was a day when inventive genius was worth more than mechanical pitching skill, and the best minds, like Russell Ford, would push graphophone needles under the stitches and nick the seams with razor blades. Batters always stood in a springy kneed stance, ready to leap to safety, and the umpire merely acknowledged the danger as a sinister, but routine risk and made no formal challenge.

The door was finally closed on spitballs, too, although Burleigh Grimes and his current brethren were licensed to work out their natural span, until now he is the last survivor. Yet many unlicensed pitchers are still bootlegging the ball by scooping off perspiration from their foreheads, a thin fluid with poor body when smeared on the ball and producing a little, hysterical hop.

But it is a poor imitation of the glory swoops that used to come from the creamy lather when Burleigh was chewing the little elm tree's splinters.

There's Larceny in His Head, but Honesty in His Feet

Safe! roars the crowd with the umpire as Werber makes a three-point landing, foot, hip and hand, to beat the throw by a comfortable markin. Werber, Sox shortstop, has made some fielding bobbles lately, but his hitting and base stealing make him a valuable Hose unit, none the less. His fielding slump is due to vanish soon. Then he'll be one of the most valuable shortstops in the league. (Pictures by Boston American Staff Photographer.)

Indian Box Corps Real Threat to Sox Sluggers

Two former Washington Senators were to match wits this afternoon when Manager Bucky Harris stretched a point to outsmart Manager Walter Johnson, in the first game of the opening Red Sox-Cleveland series at Fenway Park.

Bucky Harris and Walter Johnson have been close friends off and on the ball field for many years. "Big Barney" twirled his last ball game under Bucky Harris and then succeeded the present Red Sox menotr as manager of the Senators.

During his playing days, Johnson was the most popular ball player in either league. He was the speed king of all times and can look back on his long career with the keen satisfaction of knowing he never deliberately "dusted off" an opponent, in or out of a pinch.

According to no less an authority than Babe Ruth, Cleveland is getting the best pitching in the American League. The Indians were traveling along at a smooth and winning clip until they took on Connie Mack's rejuvenated Athletics this week in Philly.

After Willie Hudlin came through with a win in the first game, the White Elephants got up on their hind legs and kicked the Indians around in three straight games.

As a result of their three setbacks in Philadelphia, Cleveland dropped into a fifth place tie with the Detroit Tigers.

WALBERG IS READY

Johnson has a powerful club under his wing this season. And the three defeats by the Athletics are planned to drive his Indians at top speed this afternoon to make up some of the lost ground.

Although he has not been oversuccessful this season, Walberg has shown more stuff, at times, than any other Red Sox hurler. Rube has worked like a Trojan to get in shape and be of some value to Bucky Harris. If he has his control he will give the Indians something to look at, for no longer does he tip off opponents as he did in the past.

Frank Pytlak will do the receiving for the Indians and the little speedster is a dangerous foe, for not only is he a heady catcher but he is both dangerous and smart up around that plate.

The Red Sox came through with a fine win yesterday, due to the best brand of pitching they have offered this season, on the part of Fritz Ostermueller.

Harris has brought Ostermueller along carefully. He was quick to recognize that Fritz has a barrel of "stuff," but for fear that a sound shellacking might injure his morale, "Bucky" has held the former Rochester "ace" as a finishing pitcher.

Yesterday, Ostermueller displayed cause for promotion to that of a regular starting hurler. He was ordered to the mound in the seventh inning with the bases filled and no one out.

"Dusty" Rhodes, who started for the Sox, had been nicked for singles by Jo-Jo White and "Goose" Goslin and had walked McKie Cochrane, choking the sacks.

Gordon Hinkis was behind the plate, having replaced "Doc" Legett, who had a couple of fingers broken by a foul tip off White's bat in the 2d inning.

OSTERMUELLER IS RIPE

Against such a club as Detroit, three on and nobody down, is a tough spot for a rookie battery Ostermueller and Hinkis were the star Rochester battery last season and they delivered in great style yesterday.

They began to work on Charlie Gehringer, who is just about as dangerous and hitter in a pinch. They finally got Charlie on strikes. Then Hank Greenberg hit one back at Ostermueller, whose throw home was plenty of speed, and forced White at the plate but Hinkis's throw to Morgan for a double play, pulled the first baseer off the bag, and Bill Dinneen reversed his first decision, upon getting the "flash" from Bill Summers, that Morgan had failed to keep his foot on the bag.

Although it was a tough decision for a rookie to take, Ostermueller refused to be upset and forced Walker to hit to Bill Cissell, who tossed to Max Bishop, retiring Cochrane at second for the third and final out.

Ostermueller's feat was one of the best any Red Sox has come up with in many moons. It may be the makings of the young southpaw

McManus Hits Pertly but Is Slow Afield

By Joe Cashman

Cincinnati, May 10—It's quite obvious even at this early date that the Braves won't add to their record breaking fielding accomplishment this year.

Two seasons back they set a new defensive high in the National League. Last season they bettered their old mark. It was common to have them gallop over a stretch of a week or ten days without making an error.

Now it's not unusual for them to walk off the field of an afternoon charged with three or four miscues. In their last three starts, for instance, they have been found guilty of nine boots.

The lively ball is partly to blame, it being so much more difficult to handle than the slower agate of recent campaigns. The pitchers, too, are open to indictment. None has yet shown his '33 stuff.

But the chief cause, of course, is the absence of Rabbit Maranville. It has upset the entire infield. Marty McManus or anybody else can't fill the Rabbit's shoes at second, and the other members of the quartet are all jittery without their midget spark plug.

MARTY HITTING HARD

Yet the Tribe today, only three games out of first place, is two notches higher in the standing and considerably nearer the roof than on this date last spring, when it had the advantage of opening against the West at home.

And this improved showing is due to the same young man whose presence in the lineup has weakened the defense.

Marty McManus doesn't deserve to be mentioned in the same story with Rabbit Maranville as a second baseman. Rabbit, on the other hand, has no business being discussed when the topic is hitters of the McManus type.

The former Fenway foreman may occasionally lose a game in the field that Peter Pan would save, but for every one of these fighting Irishman turns in two victories with his bludgeon.

The Tribe had to have perfect pitching and fielding to win last season. Below fourth place there was nobody in the lineup to knock in runs.

Now the hurlers can make a few bad pitches, and the fielders can muss up a few drives and still remain in the ball game. Martin Joseph, hitting down in sixth place, is producing bingles which manufacture tallies. He's hit safely and played a prominent part in almost every Tribal rally in every game on this trip. His average at the moment is approximately .320, and about half his total of blows have been for extra bases.

In short, he's added just about 100 points to the teams' attack. That is why the Wilgerman entry is in the thick of the fight and one of the most feared entries in the race.

We shudder to think what would happen to the Tribe if it didn't have McManus while Maranville is convalescing. The club would be so low when the Rabbit hobbled back to the Tepee that he'd never find it.

If ever the Braves had a lucky break it was when Rob Quinn permitted his pet pupil to hop from Brooklyn to Boston.

BAVES GET 18 HITS

Marty's contribution to the first game against the Reds was two singles, a run and a run batted in. This was one of the very few occasions this season, however, when it made very little difference whether he produced or not. Everybody else did.

Not less than five Cincinnati hurlers were blasted for 18 hits, including home runs by Whitney and Lee. It was the wildest thumping orgy staged by our boys this year.

So it wasn't difficult for Ed Brandt to hurl his second successive complete game and turn in his third triumph.

Stengel-isms

Advised Lew Fonseca was out and Jimmy Dykes was in as manager of the White Sox, Casey remarked:

"It looks as if they are firing 'em early this year, so I'll have to bear down."

Later, as the Cubs and Dodgers engaged in a free-for-all hitting battle, Casey exclaimed:

"Look at my boys! They play just like professionals!"

WIGHTMAN CUP TEAM SAILS

By Associated Press

New York, May 10—Four players, the major part of the United States Wightman Cup tennis team, which will defend its honors against Great Britain at Wimbledon, June 25 and 16, sailed shortly after midnight this morning aboard the Bremen, following the captain, Helen Jacobs, who left about ten days ago.

The four who left this morning were Alice Marble of San Francisco Sarah Palfrey of Boston, Carolin Babcock of Los Angeles and Josephine Cruickshank of Santa Ana, Calif. They plan to play in the French hard court championships starting May 20 and the Wimbledon championships June 25, as well as the Wightman cup matches.

Hitchcock to Play on Eastern Team

New York, May 10 (INS)—Tommy Hitchcock, admittedly the greatest polo player in the world, will play with the All-East team in a renewal of the East-West series at the Meadow Brook Country Club next September, it was disclosed today.

Hitchcock has entirely recovered from the injuries which he received in the second game of the East-West matches at Chicago last summer. He has been out of action since that time.

Haines Shakes Up Tech Crew Again

Bill Haines, Tech crew mentor, determined to have a speedy eight ready for Yale and Columbia next week, shook up his senior shell for the second time this week.

Captain Johnny Westfall, demoted to the jayvees on Monday, has fought his way back to the varsity resuming the number six slide. At the same time, Haines put Al Mowatt back as pace-setter, relacing Tom Johnson, who came up from the junior varsity recently.

Herman Real Hot

Chicago, May 10 (AP)—Billy Herman, one player who wasn't counted on much in the Cub campaign this season, has hit safely in 15 consecutive games. His batting average is .326.

Those Posners Lead

Providence, May 10—Oscar Rosner, brother of Otto, former Princeton half mile ace, has been elected captain of the undefeated Brown freshman track team. Rosner, like his brother, is a half-miler of note.

Rosner Named Captain

Providence, R. I., May 10 (INS)—Oscar H. Rosner of Brooklyn, N. Y., brother of Otto Rosner, former Princeton track star, today was captain of Brown's undefeated freshman track team. Rosner is a middle distance runner.

Joe Knight Favorite Baer Offered Date George Opens Training

By JACK CONWAY

SPEAKING OF news Joe Knight, Georgia light heavyweight, is 10 to 8 choice to win from Tony Shucco in their 10-round bout at the Boston Garden tomorrow night.

KNIGHT AND Shucco have each signed contracts calling for them to meet Lou Brouillard at the Garden if they get the duke tomorrow evening.

Mr. Boston

"RED" AFFINITO is here and all set for his seven-round semifinal bout with Johnny Rossi on the Knight - Shucco card.

THE GOODWIN A. C. is getting ready to announce it has matched Patsy Pirroni with Unknown Winston. This scrap should furnish plenty of action.

RIP VALENTI has made Max Baer a flattering offer to box an exhibition on the proposed Pirroni-Winston card.

George Opens Training

ED DON GEORGE has started intensive training for his finish mat battle with Ernie Dusek at the Boston Garden a week from Friday night. "Rebel" Bob Russell, Pat O'Hara and "Bull" Martin have been signed as sparring partners. A rough and ready lot.

HAROLD DIBBLEE, general manager of the Boston Garden, was associated with Col. John Hammond when the latter was in the New York Garden. They are on friendly terms, and this probably means Dibblee will remain in charge of the North Station arena.

THERE WILL be a complete shake-up in the lineup at the New York Garden.

CHARLES F. ADAMS has told Frank Patrick he expects him to give Boston a winning hockey club. Readers of the Boston Evening American knew a month ago Patrick had been named leader of the Bruins. The Boston Evening American is always first with the big sports news.

I TAKE OFF my hat to Charles F. Adams for not denying the Boston Evening American's exclusive story as the average hockey magnate does under the same conditions. He is big enough to recognize a first class job of newspaper reporting.

PATRICK WILL have final say in the makeup of the 1934-1935 Bruins.

LOS ANGELES having promoters will try to get Maxie Rosenbloom to take on Mickey Walker in a bout for the light heavyweight championship of the world.

THE "TOY BULLDOG" proved he can still fight at the age of 34 when he licked Rosenbloom in an overweight match.

IF YOU WERE to ask me what the boxing game needs, I would say a dozen Mickey Walkers ranging in age from 20 to 26.

MRS. JACK SHARKEY is on the road to recovery following a major operation at the Phillips House. It was revealed today that Mrs. Sharkey's condition was very grave last week.

Collegiate Court Tilt Under Way

West Point, N. Y., May 10 (AP)—A field of 16 selected players from seven colleges begins play today in the annual New York state intercollegiate tennis championships on the Military Academy courts. Finals will be held Saturday.

Donald Hawley, New York University ace, received the call over his Fordham rival, E. Ramey Donovan, to lead the list of four seeded players in the singles by virtue of an early season triumph.

No Bluffing Here—Three Legitimate Aces

Those blooming British are getting skittish and rightly so, for tomorrow the Walker Cup matches begin at the St. Andrew's course in Scotland, and the U. S. team is ready and almost sure to win. Here you have Chandler Egan on the left, veteran star; Capt. Francis Ouimet and George T. Dunlap, Jr., on the right, three of the stars of the team from these shores. They're about to step up to the 5th tee at the St. Andrew's links to show the enemy how.

HUMAROCK ACE IN 132-MILE BOAT TEST

By E. B. Schriftgiesser

New England's most daring outboard motor boat drivers were off for Albany, today, to tune up their fast craft for the annual dash down the Hudson. Of the 62 drivers who have entered the 132-mile grind of Saturday morning, 15 are from this section, among them some of the speediest racing drivers in the country.

The famous long distance test for the little flying shingles is now in its seventh year and already Boston drivers have won it twice. Back in 1929 the second year of the classic the late Jake Dunnell went down the river in what was then the final time of 3 hours, 9 minutes. Then, the next year, J. Everett Wilkinson, another well-known Boston outboard pioneer, sped down the treacherous Hudson in 11 minutes faster time.

CABOT HOLDS RECORD

As outboard motors and hulls were improved the time from Albany to the Columbia Yacht Club landing in New York city kept getting another until in 1932 Charlie Cabot of New Haven set the record which still stands 2 hours, 56 minutes and 39 seconds.

Best known of the entries from New England in Saturday's race are the professionals in Class C. Bob Boles, popular Humarock boat builder and Kenneth MacKenzie, using one of Boles craft are among the favorite in this division.

Of the amateur entries, none has a better chance than young Clint Ferguson of Wollaston, schoolboy son of the commodore of the Central N. E. Regatta Association. He was the youngest contender in last years race, and was racing his class until an accident disabled his boat.

This year honors as youngest entrant go to another New England boy, A. F. Wagner, Jr., of Buzzards Bay.

A famous racing boat name also appears in the entry list in the person of Garfield Wood, Jr., son of the "Silver Fox," of Algonac, winner of many a Harmsworth trophy. The younger Gar Wood began his racing career this winter in Florida, and promises to be just as able a driver as his noted father.

ON HANDICAP BASIS

The races this Saturday will be started on the handicap basis, the little Class A racers getting away at 7 in the morning while the river is still unruffled with the morning winds. Then the Class B boats start at 7:13; Class C at 7:39, and Class F, the scratch boat, at 8:02.

Later the hydroplanes and runabouts make separate starts. If the handicap system works out as the officials figure all the survivors in the outboard classes should finish very close together.

But the gamble is—who will survive? The river is long and treacherous, driftwood, the wash of other boats steamship traffic, all add to the dangers. For the race the little boats and their engines are stripped down to the merest essentials, and it takes a driver with iron nerves and real knowledge of outboard racing to bring his craft safely to the finish let alone to win.

W. G. A. Play Postponed by Rain

Jupiter Pluvius once again dashed the hopes of the fans who were hoping to play the second round of W. G. A. golf matches on three golfing fronts today—that a postponement until tomorrow was made necessary.

Due to the fact that match play in the Country Club Cup handicap medal play tournament starts tomorrow at the Chicopee Street links, the match between Easton and Middleboro scheduled for there has been switched to Charles River, other two matches will be played as scheduled, Southern Midland at Marshfield and Northern meets Central at Newton.

B. C. TRACKMEN IN LAST DRILL

The Boston College track team was booked to go through a final paces today in preparation for the annual dual meet with Holy Cross team on Saturday at the Heights.

Coach Jack Ryder has put the field event entrants through the stiffest workout of the year. On paper the Maroon and Gold speedsters are favored by a margin of about five points which can be won or lost in the field.

Dummy Zaris and Dave Cushing are the hopes in the shot put, while Cushing and Hayes are looked upon to beat Al Reiss in the javelin. Frank Murphy is the Eagle hope in the hammer.

In order for the Eagles to win it is necessary for a 1-2 of these men to finish within the first two places.

Dash men and distance stars were to be given a light workout today and will have a rest tomorrow. The Eagles expect to sweep through the running events.

Yale Passes Up Coast Regatta

New Haven Ct., May 10 (INS)—Yale will not row in an intercollegiate regatta at Los Angeles early in July this year it was announced last night by the Yale Athletic Association.

Due to the fact that the Yale-Harvard classic event on the Thames is set down for June 22, one week later than last year, Yale authorities decided there would not be time after that event to get the crew into shape for another race on the West Coast early in July.

NAME PAIRINGS FOR WALKER CUP PLAY

St. Andrews, Scotland, May 10 (AP)—The draw today for opening Scotch foursome matches in Walker Cup competition pairs the golfing heroes of the home state and their British colleagues against the American contingent.

The other pairs will be: England's Cyril Tolley and Leonard Crawley vs. Charles Yates and Dr. Harold Paddock; Ireland's Jimmy Bruen and Jimmy Jones vs. Ellsworth Vines and Lawrence Dill; Wales' Dai Rees and Harry Weetman vs. Lawson Little and Reynolds Smith; England's Arthur Perkins and Eric Fiddian vs. Walter Emery and Johnny Fischer; Scotland's Jack Stirk and Tom Torrance vs. Ralph Guldahl and Ray Mangrum.

Although the two captains have several days ago let it be known the names in a hat and let the draw fall where it would, in fact on the orthodox practice of numbering their teams as 1 and 2, Scott was credited with a smart move in putting McLean and McRae recorded at St. Andrews as his strongest combination at No. 2 and assuring them a better chance of victory than if he would have pitted Goodman and Lyle against Vines and Dill.

AP: The real reason for the withdrawal of Lawrence Morris from the British Walker Cup team in favor of Cyril Mitchell, it was learned today, was because Morris was unable to get passage for himself, wife and baby on the Britannia, sailing Tuesday night. Morris offered Mitchell his stateroom but it was enough for Mitchell to have to room to pack his bags and leave for South for Ireland.

The Royal and Ancient is announcing his withdrawal and the substitution of Leonard Crawley merely said that Munn was "indisposed."

OL' DYNAMITER BLASTS 'BULL' TO OBLIVION

By Jack Conway

Sonnenberg staged a brilliant rally to win the match after he had lost the first fall in 16m. 32s. The old Dynamiter then blasted Martin out of the picture in 8m. 46s. He completely wrecked the "Bull" as he knocked him through the ropes and to the floor of the Arena six times.

Martin was in no condition to resume wrestling. Sonnenberg allowed the "Bull" five extra minutes of rest, but at the end of that time Martin was still in poor condition and unable to return to the ring. Referee Ted Tonneman declared Sonnenberg the winner.

Mrs. Sonnenberg told this writer she plans to travel around the country with Gus and attend all of his matches.

"I don't know anything about the wrestling game, but I feel I can be helpful to Gus," she said. "I want to see him win back the heavyweight championship of the world. I know he can do it."

"I was elated at the large crowd that turned out to see my wrestle Martin. I still have the pull at the box office. Perhaps I'll never draw $72,000 again as I did the night I won the title from Strangler Lewis at the Garden, but I'll come close to that figure if I can secure another bout with Ed Don George."

MARTIN DOWN AND OUT

Martin pounded Sonny with his right elbow. He lifted Gus up from the canvas, and belted him over. His elbow struck Gus' jaw with terrific force. He repeated with this illegal blow six times. The final smash sent Sonnenberg crashing to the canvas with great force. Martin hopped over, Tim, picked him up and slammed him to the mat and pinned him with a top body press. The time was 18m. 33s.

Back on the mat Sonny set a wild pace. He was determined to put Martin out of commission as quickly as possible. He punched him around the head and body, and then drove him through the ropes with a fierce tackle.

Martin was in distress as he started to get back into the ring. Gus hit him with another tackle and dropped him to the floor of the Arena. Martin tried to get back into the ring on four more occasions, and each time he was met by a driving butt.

The last time Martin went sky rocketing from the apron of the ring to the floor of the Arena he landed on his back, and was badly hurt. It was five minutes before his seconds were able to assist him to his dressing room.

Dick Stahl knocked off Nick Skotos in a fall in 13m. 24s., using an airplane whirl. Skotos did a pinch hit stunt for Jim Wallis, who was unable to wrestle on account of injuries to his forehead.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Mayes McLain, 228, Oklahoma, and Leo Maralyon, 206, Buffalo, drew, 14 15 (both counted out).

Worcester—Ed Don George, North Java, N. Y., defeated Nick Estes, two out of three falls (George won first in 47:41 with cradle hold, succumbed to body lift and slam in 4:58, and won the third in 14:32 with a body press.

Hope Johnny Wins

Jessie Pawson and Johnny Kelly were the first to enter the national 15-colleague championship at Norwich, Conn., May 30.

"Who Do You Think You're Pushing, You Big Baboon!"

An old familiar saying in the subway rush was Bull Martin's way of trying to talk himself out of a bad situation against Gus Sonnenberg, according to a ring-side fan within grunting distance. "I've been married twice," said Sonny, "why should I be afraid of the Bull!" So he went right out and won the main bout of Alex MacLean's wrestling show at the Arena. Looks as though the Bull is growing a mustache but it's only blood.

NUSSLEIN TO TRAIN DAVIS CUP TEAM

New York, May 10 (AP)—In its determination to produce a winning Davis Cup team this year, the United States Lawn Tennis Association has cast aside another tradition and, incidentally, has given "Big Bill" Tilden a few good reasons to smile in a satisfied way.

Dropping the old idea that Davis Cup preparations should be strictly the affair of the team members, their captain and the guiding committee, the association has engaged Hans Nusslein, German professional who won the "world's championship" at Berlin last Fall, to play against the team members during their preparatory sessions at the Marion Cricket Club.

In announcing the appointment, Captain R. Norris Williams emphasized the fact that Nusslein is not to be a "coach" or to direct tactics but merely will play against members of the squad to sharpen their games.

He added that it was hoped some of the leading American pros might also be secured for practice from time to time.

Newton H. Tracksters Host Tomorrow in Quadrangular Meet

By Bill Connell

A novel track venture goes on tomorrow afternoon when Newton high plays host to Lynn English, Everett and Medford track and field teams in a quadrangular meeting.

School dual meets fail to attract as many customers as are desired. This set of games may now that quadrangular affairs are more colorful than the commonplace battles, in which case more of these meetings will be arranged for future seasons.

The four-sided games tomorrow offer some excellent racing, with Newton the favorite, and Medford second choice. Conducted in the beautiful Newton stadium, the meet will be one of the highlights of the season.

The school baseball slate was light for this afternoon, with only three games billed. Tennis, golf and track rounded out the day's program. Baseball offered St. John's prep at Harvard from as the sole Greater Boston contest.

Dom Lupo of Watertown continued his Grade A hurling as he southpawed Watertown High to a 6-5 win over Winthrop, in a game played at Watertown. Lupo also singled to chase in one run.

Bill Minot of Groton tops the privats school hitters, with an impressive .591 average. Ed Russell of Noble and Greenough has a .563 figure for second ranking, while Brad Jenkins of Thayer hits for an even .500, to hold third place.

Medford's win over Everett gave the Greater Boston lead with two wins and not a defeat. Malden improved its average by beating Somerville 8 to 4 in ten innings thrilling baseball. Revere went to a second place loop tie with Somerville by beating Chelsea 9 to 5.

Batting Saves Purple as Flingers Falter

By Walter Isley

This season is a far cry from the prosperous days of old when Holy Cross boasted many of the greatest pitchers in intercollegiate baseball, hurlers such as Ownie Carroll, Bots Nekola and Normie Sims.

Jack Barry has another great machine blasting the hillsides of Mt. St. James in Worcester, but the mound staff has been riddled by a series of jinxes which have had the Purple coach walking the floor at night.

Two months ago, Joe Mulligan was looked upon as the mainstay of the staff. He broke a thumb. Then Tom McLaughlin, a most promising pitcher, had to have an appendix removed, and to cap the climax, Ed Britt, Lexington giant who is expected to develop into a big league player, was rendered ineligible, so that Barry was left with only two hurlers with whom to carry on.

But through the instrument of a batting barrage which is the like of such seldom before witnessed in college play, Holy Cross goes on winning in sensational manner, batting in one run after another behind the somewhat indifferent pitching of Bill Sliva, Walpole southpaw, and Bill Michaels, a hitherto inexperienced intra-mural hurler.

BEAT YALE, 5-4

Only yesterday, Holy Cross pulled out with a well earned but hard fought decision over Yale 5 to 4, in a 11 inning decision that had the Purple supporters sitting on edge throughout.

But the New Havenites are only one of three formidable foes that Barry must face this week. Tomorrow comes Pennsylvania, which holds joint possession of first place in the Intercollegiate League with Harvard. On Saturday, Columbia travels to Worcester, so that Sliva who won from Yale yesterday must do double service, against the Rams, with only Michaels to carry on against Penn.

KNOCK OUT BLANCHE

As matters now stand, Holy Cross has lost only one game, that an early April affair to Brown by the margin of 7 to 6. The heavy artillery did untold damage to the reputedly strong staffs of Providence College and Tufts.

Just 41 hits rattled off the Purple bats in those two games, including a home run, five triples and seven doubles with Al Blanche taking a sixth inning journey to the showers as Providence lost its first game of the year and several of the Tuft's staff following suit.

Some idea of the way the Purple has been pounding the ball shows in the batting averages. Up to the game with Yale, every regular on the team was hitting well over .300. Jim Canty doing all right by himself with a mark of .539.

Saturday's game with Columbia is to be a day of days. A big welcome is being prepared for Andy Coakley, Lions' coach, a graduate of Holy Cross, who was later outstanding pitcher of the American League while wearing the spangles of Connie Mack's Athletics.

BRADLEY FAILS TO ENTER HORSE IN PREAKNESS CLASSIC

UNDECIDED ON STARTING OF CAVALCADE

By International News Service

Baltimore, May 10—For the first time in several years, Col. E. R. Bradley, the Kentucky horseman, and three winner of the derby, probably will have a starter in the historic Preakness stakes to be contested here Saturday.

The Kentucky sportsman's trainer, William Hurley, announced if Bradley was to start his eligibles, Bazaar, Blue Arabs or Baker's Dozen, he would have sent in instructions by now.

It appeared today there will be about nine starters in this Eastern classic. Whether Cavalcade, the sensational Derby winner this year will start is still undetermined Bob Smith, trainer for Brookmeads stables, owners of the English bred colt, reserved his decision until Friday.

Cavalcade will be given a workout tomorrow and if there is no last Saturday did no apparent harm, Smith probably will send him to the post in an effort to duplicate the feats of Sir Barton Gallant Fox and Burgoo King, the trio who turned the trick of winning both the Derby and the Preakness.

Even if Cavalcade does not start Smith has a strong hand with High Quest and Time Clock.

Other probable starters are Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Discovery who ran second to Cavalcade in the Derby; Mrs. F. J. Heller's Bazaar, Gretrex Stable's Spy Hill Northway Stable's Riskulus, the Western Hope; Mrs. F. A. Carreaud's Time Supply; C. Wilding's Swiftport and H. P. Metcalfe Snappy Story.

Baltimore, May 10 (AP)—Norman Church's Riskulus was listed today as a sure starter in the Preakness Saturday at Pimlico.

His trainer, E. L. Fitzgerald, notified the Maryland Jockey Club the Preakness candidate would arrive here from Church Downs today. Riskulus will be ridden by Bobby Jones.

Followers of the $25,000 Maryland racing classic today were interested in Belmont Park, where Trainer Robert A. Smith planned to give Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Cavalcade and High Quest a final test.

On this test, Smith expected to make his decision whether the Kentucky Derby winner or High Quest would be shipped to the "Old Hilltop" for the mile and three-sixteenths feature of Saturday.

WILLIAMS NEXT EAGLE FOE

With an eye only for the inter collegiate baseball crown, the Boston College nine will attempt to annex victory over Williams College at Williamstown on Saturday.

Coach Frank McCrehan has nominated Charley Marcesa to throw them up. Last year the Eagles were trained out in the seventh inning after the Williams nine had run up a healthy lead.

Limit Gas for Cars in 500-Mile Race

Indianapolis, Ind., May 10 (INS)—Each must qualify in the time trials for the annual 500-mile race, at the Indianapolis motor speedway, under the same rules and regulations stipulated for the race itself. The cars will be allowed only three gallons of gasoline or fuel for the test run of 25 miles, according to an announcement made by Louis Schwitzer, chairman of the technical committee.

In the actual 500-mile competition, cars are limited to 45 gallons and must average more than 11 miles to the gallon to enable them to finish.

Fonseca Seeking Player's Berth

Chicago, May 10 (INS)—Lew Fonseca, who left town eight days ago manager of the White Sox, came back today as a member of the unemployed.

He's confident, however, that he will not be unemployed for long. He hopes to get his injured leg back in playing shape before long, and feels sure he can connect with some club as reserve first baseman and pinch hitter. He was replaced as White Sox manager by Jimmy Dykes.

Fighting No Thrill to McLarnin, It's Just a Business to Him

By DAVIS J. WALSH
International News Service Sports Editor

New York, May 10 The young man has taken his share of a million dollars out of the many box offices as he cares to favor with his patronage. He's been fêted, sought after, publicized, lionized and pandered to. His method has been one of marked simplicity throughout, no great strain on the forehead or brain and the intellect. He trains them and leaves them. Yes, Jimmy Archibald McLarnin, the welterweight champion and a very strange thing today. He said he didn't really like prize fighting.

A BUSINESS TO JIMMY

I'm reminded of George Owen the All American backfield man from Harvard, who spent four years running, passing, reversing backing up the line. But when the last game was done, he sneered at the pastime in a well-bred way. It wasn't fun, said he. It was drudgery.

To McLarnin, fighting is more than both and at the same time neither. It's business just that business. So many hours a day so many days a year. A few minutes on a few rounds in the ring. Somebody wins, somebody loses. Somebody is always doing one thing or the other in thousands of business offices throughout the country every day in the year.

What then, is the business with him? Dietetics. Exactly, dietetics. Not one of dietetics. Two or more. I expect to hear any day now that Babe Herman has always been a great hand with orchids.

ROSS A WELTERWEIGHT

"No, I get no kick out of fighting," McLarnin said today, in his serious way. "I know I'm Irish, and that they're supposed to be a nationality that fights for fun. But there's nothing in pleasure fighting and, besides, this is different. This is the ring and it's strictly a business proposition."

Another was that Barney Ross, the lightweight champion, and his opponent here the end of the month, had become, according to inside information a welterweight; whereas he, James Archibald, now weighed less than 147 and expected to do 144 the night of the fight.

"He may even outweigh me," said the man who is supposed to pull eight or nine extra pounds in this meeting. He added that he saw Ross in the movies, thought he had a "nice left hook" and that he "seemed to move around pretty good."

But what about these plural dietetics?

"Why," says he, as though surprised that I should keep mentioning a matter so commonplace, "I'm not finished with the ring yet. But, when I am I may study medicine."

Dave Deshler, Old Boxing Ace, Dead

EFFORT IS MADE TO CONTROL PROFITS

Labor Is Primarily Interested in the Distribution

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

The philosophy of profit, as understood by capital and labor has long been the subject on which well intentioned attempts at arbitration have broken up. In a large measure these failures of the past were due to capital's insistence that the philosophy of profit was completely encompassed by the philosophy of practical operation. Labor, on the other hand, had little patience with such reasoning and insisted that the social phase of the philosophy of profit was the right and proper one to receive emphasis. In other words, labor was primarily interested in the distribution of profits as they related to the well-being of the greatest number.

Capital, believing firmly in the past success of practical operation, created the law of individualism, which came to regard maximum rewards as a just due for enterprise and efficiency. But, apparently, the world of workers adopted the theory that individualism did not produce much for the common happiness. As a consequence labor sought, and is still seeking today, to bring capital under control through Fascism and the New Deal.

* * *

Just what the future for capital, and its theory of practical operation, may be, rests to a large extent in the hands of capital itself. Col. Benjamin A. Franklin, Boston industrial engineer, writing a series of editorials in "Industry," official publication of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, does not believe the situation is hopeless from the executive viewpoint. After outlining the relations of capital and labor, as we presented them above, he strongly urges capital, through its trade associations, to soundly operate the philosophy of profit, both for its own and the general good. Col. Franklin is to be congratulated on his editorials, and we do so, appending a wish that every New England industrial and business leader will read them.

Carloadings report due tomorrow should show a slight drop from the preceding week. There is no need for market fears on this factor alone, however, since a downturn in loadings at this time is a normal seasonal development. The important comparison is with a year ago. Compared with the like 1933 period loadings are up about 10 per cent. Breaking down the loadings reports of individual roads received so far shows that the big eastern trunks continue to move a good volume of freight from the manufacturing centers they serve.

Share prices refuse to behave in approved fashion. The great majority of traders are bearish, either because they are impregnated with pessism brought on by what they consider untoward events in the business and political worlds, or because they have been forced out of their holdings. We do not subscribe to bearishness at this juncture. Prices may flop around for a session or two longer, with some individual issues losing ground in disheartening fashion, but we still feel a base is being made for a rally to 100-101 on the 30 industrial average.

MORGENTHAU IS SET FOR SILVER DISCUSSIONS

Reports Outcome of Conference to President

By Associated Press

Washington, May 10—Secretary Morgenthau has reported to President Roosevelt on the results of his senatorial silver conferences and has notified interested senators the treasury is ready to continue discussions.

"I said I was ready to continue the discussion at any time convenient to the senators," Morgenthau told newspapermen later.

Asked whether there were further developments at the White House, Morgenthau replied:

"I reported the conference to the President. I hope I was a good reporter."

As to administration views on the silver issue, Morgenthau said he "may be able to give a little more satisfactory explanation."

His reference apparently was to the previously expressed administration attitude toward what portions of legislation should be mandatory and what permissive.

White House expressions naming the building of a 25 per cent silver reserve as an ultimate objective but leaving methods of acquiring that reserve to the President were reiterated by Morgenthau.

He said no definite engagement has been made for another meeting with silver Senators, but he was ready to join them at any time they should make the request.

King said later he would confer with members of his committee on the time for another meeting.

Apparently, the President had informed Morgenthau how far he was willing to go on legislation, and a clarification of the situation was expected soon.

The measure that is contemplated would declare for the accumulation of silver until it comprises 25 per cent, or perhaps more, of the currency metallic reserve.

King said no decision had been made on the nationalization plan and pointed out that under the reserve program the treasury would probably acquire all domestic stocks.

These figures are exclusive of proportions of profits and losses of foreign subsidiary and associated companies applicable to holdings of Coty, Inc., in these companies.

Cotton Lower in New York Trading

New York, May 10 (INS)—Unsettled by the slump in silver futures and weakness in securities, the cotton market today continued the downtrend under way the previous day and dropped more than 50 cents a bale in active trading.

Grains Higher in Chicago Market

Chicago, May 10 (AP) — Grain values scored advances today after a wavering start. The outstanding factor was buying based on apparent general inadequacy of overnight moisture relief in drought territory. Opening at ⅛ off to ⅜ up, July 83½-⅞, wheat later rose all around. Corn started unchanged to ⅛ lower and subsequently rallied.

DECEMBER LOWS WILL BE TESTED, SAYS HANEY

Concession to Silver Crowd on the Bull Side of Market

By LEWIS HANEY
(Professor of Economics, New York University)

New York, May 10—Everything one may say about the stock market must be taken with a grain of Washington salt. That is, everything depends on unforseeable political action.

Stocks have been declining for several reasons. The "leaders" have mostly been far too high, selling for 13 to 30 times any conceivable earnings per share. There has been some buying based on "better business," which is not a good basis. Finally, there has been an ill considered type of buying on silver inflation. The washing out of these factors has produced the reaction.

Then there is the prospective increase in government spending for farmers. It is to distribute about $600,000,000 during the balance of the year, a large chunk going to corn-hog raisers. That should be a "stimulus."

Then there is the dead weight of new deal restrictions on business. The demand for more AAA power, the oil dictatorship, the tel. and tel. "code," the tariff dictatorship, the drastic stock exchange control bill, etc. These things cast doubt on business profits.

There is thus no definite indication of an end to the downward drift. For once, the general idea in the street seems about right, namely that nothing more than technical rallies are in sight, and that at least the December lows will be tested before sustained recovery.

On the bull side of speculation, there is the concession by the President to the silver crowd. If this goes through, a further depreciation of the dollar is inevitable. Immediately it would mean more government spending, and an increase in the enormous excess reserve of the banks. It would mean "goodby" to the last pretext that we are on any sort of gold standard.

As the more "technical" symptoms, I note weakness in bonds, and the lack of rallying power in railway stocks. Bid prices have tended to stay relatively low. The supply of several leading stocks for sale on the bulge Tuesday was considerable, as Telephone, General Motors, Steel and Atchison.

So it would seem well for speculative traders who have not been on the side lines (as I have previously advised), to get out on further strength.

I have advised no speculative purchases. My only thought has been the protection of one's money against inflation and other new deal tactics. From this standpoint, I think that moderate purchases of certain reasonably-priced stocks are desirable.

Crop Experts Are Concerned Over Spring Draught

By Associated Press

Chicago, May 10—Threatened by light rains last night, but not dispelled, the spring drouth of the Middle Western grain belt was viewed today with grave concern by crop experts in many states.

Winter wheat, they agreed, was seriously affected by the absence of moisture already, and some experts predicted that unless substantial rain fell within a week the crop would produce as little as 25 per cent.

Oats was regarded by the experts as sharing the same fate as winter wheat while most of them agreed chances for a good corn crop were bright, given an ordinary break on moisture.

Dr. T. A. Kisselbach, University of Nebraska agronomist, said that in his state the winter wheat loss was tremendous, without question. The prospective yield, he said, declined from 45 bushels to the acre three weeks ago to 20 bushels now. He predicted the crop in all but the western section would be a total failure if there were no rain within 10 days. Since the bulk of the corn was not planted, he said rains would facilitate a good crop.

Crops in Missouri, without rain at all for the last 10 days and with but 59 per cent of normal moisture since April 1, were barely holding their own, with wheat in central sections suffering from chinch bugs, the department of agriculture announced. Wheat in the southern part of Kansas was heading on short straw, indicating its struggle for existence as a result of the drought.

Charles D. Reed, chief of the Iowa weather and crop bureau, said the only damage in his state so far has been to hay, which could be replaced with soy beans. He said oats and corn had suffered no "real" damage, and predicted a good corn crop of Iowa received rains as late as the last of May. The entire southeastern section had some rain last night, with the heaviest fall at Des Moines, one-half inch.

Federal observers in Michigan dubbed the rain there Wednesday as "the million dollar shower" and now expressed concern over the outcome of only the hay crop in the western section. The fruit belt was apprehensive because of winter damage and all were agreed that the state still needed more rain.

Interstate Stores April Sales Gain

New York, May 10—April sales of Interstate Depart. Stores, Inc., exclusive of groceries and leased departments, totaled $1,741,018 against $1,561,847 in April, 1933, an increase of 11.47 per cent.

RAIL MANAGERS INSTITUTING INNOVATIONS

Equipment Expenses Run Into the Millions

By B. C. FORBES

Are we on the eve of revolutionizing our railway facilities on a scale which will infuse prosperity into various industries, those producing durable goods? If, as Will Hays tells me the motion picture industry spent half-a-billion dollars in switching from silence to sound, how many hundreds of millions of dollars would be put into circulation if every existing passenger train and engine were supplanted by the new streamline type, propelled by Diesel motors or other modern power?

B. C. Forbes

After a long period of relative standpatism, railway managers are instituting innovations which fire the imagination.

Quite within the range of possibility is the discarding as rapidly as practicable of existing rolling stock, and the substitution of equipment capable of covering a hundred miles an hour.

And of course, every up-to-date passenger car would have to be air-conditioned. That would mean more millions of expenditures in a field which would not take business away from any other existing industry.

By giving rein to the imagination, one could envisage America's rail transportation supplemented and complemented by ownership and unification of motor buses and air lines, forming a rounded-out nation-wide system of transportation transcending that of any other country.

Admittedly, railway companies will have to be given more latitude in accumulating earnings during active times than they have been given heretofore by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It may be, also, that in early stages financial assistance will have to be extended by governmental agencies.

But it is logical to reason that new trains approaching the speed of aeroplanes and far excelling them in comfort, will attract greatly increased patronage. If, as anticipated, the new trains embody comforts not heretofore furnished, and can outspeed even the swiftest motor buses, surely they will lure passengers who would have preferred either buses or aeroplanes to old-fashioned trains.

STOCKS BREAK TO NEW LOWS, THEN RALLY

New York, May 10—Swayed by the succession of confusing silver developments in Washington, the stock market broke 1 to more than 4 points to new lows for the year in a storm of selling, and then rallied.

The recovery came after two waves of liquidation engulfed the list and sent the ticker several minutes behind. Announcement of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that he had called a new conference with silver advocates after refusing mandatory legislation at yesterday's parley was responsible for the turn in market.

Earlier losses were cut down substantially and a few issues, notably American Telephone, some of the silvers and Radio preferred B, went above the previous close. Short covering was a big factor, traders avoiding the market until the silver situation and the status of the Fletcher-Rayburn bill in the Senate were clarified.

Grains were outstanding in commodities on the unabated drought in the West. Wheat soared the maximum of 5 cents a bushel, while oats, corn and rye rose sharply. Silver started off with a tumble of 100 points and then recovered this loss later. Cotton followed this pattern while rubber was weak.

Speculative bonds broke badly, unsettling the bond market though government issues were firm. The dollar was steady.

Better business news helped turn sentiment sofewhat. U. S. Steel shipments in April showed a substantial gain. The International Harvester annual meeting heard of a big upturn in the company's business, while Walter S. Gifford, testifying in Washington, told of improvement for American Telephone.

Stocks showed losses of 1 to more than 2 points in the first hour, with trading at a slow pace. Chrysler, Case Threshing, Bohn Aluminum, Johns-Manville and Pullman were down 2 or more points. Follansbee and duPont were down 2 or more points.

Issues down a point or so included Air Reduction, Allied Chemical, American Commercial Alcohol, American Tobacco B, Athison, Bethlehem Steel and Columbian Carbon. Corn Products and Delaware Lackawanna were down a point or more.

Dealings were compartively quiet in the second hour, but many shares dropped back to around their earlier low points. Santa Fe and Montgomery Ward were under pressure around noon.

General Motors sagged more than a point. Goodyear, Harbison Walker, Hercules Powder, Howe Sound, Libby Owens and U. S. Steel showed losses of a point or so.

Losses of 1 to more than 5 points ruled inthe third hour. Homestake Mining recorded a loss of 5 points. Issues down 3 or more included Air Reduction, Atchison, Bethlehem Steel, Bohn Aluminum, Columbian Carbon and Cudahy Packing.

Crucible Steel was down more than 4 points. Houston Oil and International Silver showed losses of more than 3 points. U. S. Steel was down almost 2 points. United Fruit was down 2 points.

Stocks rallied briskly in the fourth hour, with American Telephone showing a net gain of around two points. Steel shares also participated in the recovery. Silver shares were only slightly above the lows made earlier in the session.

Commodities were not altogether in agreement. Wheat and other grains rallied. The dollar was steady in foreign exchange dealings. Considerable short selling was reported.

Sales to 2 p. m. approximated 1,880,000 shares.

GIFFORD FLAYS PHONE PLAN

By International News Service

Washington, May 10—Establishment of a federal communications commission vested with drastic regulatory powers will disorganize the telephone business, Walter S. Gifford, president of American Telephone, charged today before the House interstate commerce committee.

He appeared in opposition to the bill by Representative Rayburn (D.) of Texas, which would place the nation's communications systems under government control.

Gifford testified the A. T. & T. and its associated companies, comprising the Bell System, own and operate about 85 per cent of the telephone service of the country.

"Regulation is not new to us," he said. "From the beginning we have welcomed it. We are now regulated by 45 state commissions, many municipalities and by the interstate commerce commission. Within the past year, we have become further regulated through the NIRA and the Securities Act."

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

LAWRENCE SHAW
National Director

By L. F. ROSS
Boston Wing Commander

Greetings, Junior Birdmen! Who is to be the first boy or girl to form a squadron and win one of the "Captain" or "Commander" bars to be attached to his wings? We hear that a lot of you are busy and are looking forward to printing the picture of the young Birdman or Birdwoman who first succeeds.

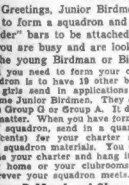
All you need to form your own squadron is to have 19 other boys and girls send in applications to become Junior Birdmen. They can be in Group C or Group A. It does not matter. When you have formed your squadron, send in a quarter (25 cents) for your charter and your squadron materials. You can frame your charter and hang it in your home or your clubrooms or wherever your squadron meets.

Group B Members! Show This to Your Parents

This column is teaching the boys and girls of New England the rudiments of aeronautics and hopes to make those children the most air-minded in the country. Your interest is invited.

Group B consists of boys and girls from 10 to 15 years old and Group A consists of boys and girls from 16 to 21. The younger are sometimes in need of your more mature advice and judgment. Encourage their interest in aviation. It is not foolish to think the youngest YOU like best may be the Lindbergh or the Amelia Earhart of the future.

So, Fathers, Uncles and Older Brothers, lay aside your magazine for a few minutes, loosen your belt and fight down on the floor. Help Junior with his model or whatever aeronautic problem around his specialty. Remember it may have been just Fate that kept you from being a good pilot. Don't deny a boy or girl the chance to make good in aeronautics if that is the way his interest leans.



Jean Hill

Aviation Is Open To Every Youth

Dear Wing Commander:

"I hope my application for membership did not come too late for me to enter the Motto Contest.

"Aviation interests me very much, more from the point of a designer or an artist, for though I doubt that I'll ever pilot one (this is my picture in a wheel chair enclosed), I would like to develop new and original ideas through the medium of pen and ink, for after all, that is where every machine starts in the designer's mind.

"I hope you will have something doing along this line, for I'd like to enter into the spirit of one organization like the thousands of other boys and girls. It's a great idea and some one deserves a lot of credit. Sincerely, Carl Reade Bell, 20, 40 W. Walnut Park, Roxbury.

(You're not the right track, Carl. Your physical handicap will not prevent you participating in our activities since they will consist largely of the following in the Boston American and the Sunday Advertiser. Nor will it prevent you personally from achieving your ambition. You have probably heard that every pilot in the air there must be from five to nine men on the ground. There consists the designer, the builder and the mechanic. Airplanes need radical ideas. They need greater speed, greater stability, greater landing range, greater everything. They have just started. You can help give them the impetus they need. Your drawings show exceptional talent. Keep at it. We're betting on you.)

Carl R. Bell

Questions and Answers Box

Note—Our postman is a big, brawny fellow. He can carry all the letters you send in. Questions will be answered in the Question and Answers Box. Let's go!

Constructive

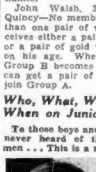
Joseph Landry, 57 Spencer ave., Chelsea—No, you do not have to belong to a squadron to participate in the contests. Yes, you can win one of the scholarships if you do not belong to a squadron. You do not have to enter a model building contest to be eligible for competition in the scholarship contest. Ernest Giouard, Jr., 41½ Perham st., Nashua, N. H.—The Junior Birdmen of America now includes more than 40,000 boys and girls in all parts of the country. The exact number is unknown because it is growing rapidly every day. The New England membership (Boston American and Boston Sunday Advertiser Wing) is more than 2000.

Harold and Edith Abrams, 133 Intervale st., Roxbury—The membership is too large to print all the names.

John Walsh, 33 Babcock st., Quincy—No member is given more than one pair of wings. Each receives either a pair of silver wings or a pair of gold wings depending on his age. When a member in Group B becomes 16 years old he can get a pair of gold wings and join Group A.

Who, What, Where and When on Junior Birdmen

To those boys and girls who have never heard of the Junior Birdmen . . . This is a new organization open to all New England boys and girls between ten years old and 21 years old. It is sponsored by Mr. William Randolph Hearst and designed to make the youth of America the most air-minded in the world. It will teach them lots about flying by printing aviation news in the Junior Birdmen column in the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser every day. It will provide popular pilots' polls, scrapbook contests, model plane building and flying contests, airport field days and other interesting competitions with handsome prizes going to the winners.



Harold Abrams

To become a member all you do is find the membership application blank adjoining this column, fill out the questions, attach a dime (a ten cent piece) to your application and send it to the Junior Birdmen, Boston Evening American.

In return you will receive a pair of beautiful silver wings if you are between 10 and 16 years old, and a handsome pair of gold wings if you are between 16 and 21. There are then a member and can take part in all activities and be eligible to form your own flight squadron and wear the bar of "Captain" or "Commander" attached to your wings.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Details of the First Annual New England Model Plane Derby of the Boston Wing of Junior Birdmen will be announced soon.

* * *

Plans for the first field day at the airport have not been completed but they are taking shape and promise a most interesting time for all Junior Birdmen. It will probably be held Saturday, June 9, at the Municipal Airport. . . . . .

* * *

So much interest has been taken in the Air Dictionary that we may print the first five lists at the end of the series for those members who missed them.

* * *

Don't forget to keep your scrapbook. One of these days there will be a scrapbook contest and YOU might be the winner.

* * *

We want pictures of our Junior Birdmen and Birdwomen, but they must be clear and sharp. The dull ones won't show up well on newsprint. We will publish as many of them and as often as space permits.

Happy Landings!

By N. F. T.

Just about every time it occurs to me that maybe this column should be started off one of these Thursdays with something else other than what the Rudy Vallee hour (WEEI) has to offer between 8 and 9 o'clock, the program planners feed me a feature flash from New York. Usually such advices leap over to take precedence ahead of other broadcasting bits in hand. Again it happens and obligation to the readers being all important as it is, the Rudy radio revels would appear to rate what we term the "lead" here again today.

* * *

Tonight this not so young now Vallee chap plans to introduce Georgie Jessel, musical comedy juvenile, master of ceremonies, dialect demon at large and efficient extemporaneous wit. Another likely attraction is to be the stuttering screen character, Confidence Ates. Still one more is Henry Hull well known dramatic actor from the Broadway legitimate stage.

Henry Hull

Mr. Hull has in mind to portray a brief bit of Henry VIII business for the air audience this evening. Presumably for good "mike" measure, so to speak, the funny fellows of vaudeville named Cross and Dunn are slated to round out the weekly 60 minutes setting, as supervised by radioland's fair haired favorite, All in all, Rudy seemingly deserves the indigence of loud speaker patrons who seek an ear or two full of variety ether entertainment.

Next of the network news notes that can be justly called interesting, is word from Washington saying John Charles Thomas is joining Mrs. James Roosevelt, mother of the President, on Sunday afternoons (WEEI) at 3:30 to sing "Mother of Mine" during the half hour Mother's Day observance. If that doesn't win the day be a dial treat, no zone offering will. Thus registers this meaning to be ever humble opinion at least.

* * *

FLEETING FLASHES

Mary Small, the little lass who sounds so big when she sings for those soap powder people, celebrated her birthday anniversary in our always alert newspaper, good old Alma-Mater American . . . Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians, "Pennsylvanians" orchestra re-signed by the motor car makers . . . Martha (WAAB) Wright has also a recipe for other day on the air, while holding forth in her Monday morning cooking school over at 9 o'clock. It was a request for old-time steamed Indian Pudding. This morning she also prescribed for what she asked about, instructions taken from a very frayed cook-book, dated 1893 and owned by a loyal listener, one of the Otter River O'Briens . . .

MAY 30 CLOSING DAY ON TEXTS

With the contest drawing to a close, May 30 being the last day for the receipt of entries, texts submitted in the Mount Rushmore Memorial Inscription Competition are coming in with every mail to the local contest editor at 5 Winthrop Square, Boston.

Many more continue to arrive. By this time every point that might cause confusion has been cleared up. Information and rules published in the Boston Evening American and Boston Sunday Advertiser and associated Hearst newspapers.

Chas. S. G. Lamb of Willard ave., Portsmouth, N. H., wants a book of rules. These books may be obtained from the headquarters of the contest at 220 South Street, New York City. A three cents stamped envelope 5½ inches by 8½, should accompany the request.

J. J. French of Northampton sends the text must not exceed the text as a poem. Some of the great poets of this country have passed judgment on the 500 word limit. I believe it would be better if the contestants stuck to straight prose, or factual writing.

Remember, plain, simple words are the best after all. And also remember the text must not exceed than 600 words and must be written on the nine episodes selected by the national committee.

The closing date is May 30.

Pledge of $44,000 Aids Fund Fight

Worcester, May 10—Announcement that a contingent gift, pledging to one-quarter of the $175,000 objective of the Worcester Academy centennial fund, has been pledged by a friend of the academy, today started academy alumni optimistically campaigning for the fund.

Frank A. Edmands and Albert A. Scott are chairmen of the fund in the Boston district. The pledge made by the anonymous donor was to furnish the last $44,000 needed to complete the total.

Mrs. Alice B. Green, 59 Hyde Ave., Newton, Mass., says: "I had Stomach Trouble for over a year. With all the unpleasant and disagreeable symptoms including Gas and Constipation. I had been treated by a local physician for nearly a year. He did not help me. I wanted to go to Dr. Walsh. I feared that I would not be able to pay Dr. Walsh's fees which I thought were quite large. A friend told me that Dr. Walsh's fees were very reasonable and I had him treat me. Now I feel so much better that I am glad to make this statement that others may benefit by my experience." Communism in Our Schools Should Be Suppressed

WHAT sort of people are these who have found employment in the City of New York as teachers in our public schools?

We refer to the seven hundred who petitioned the Legislature to defeat a bill, which has now passed both Houses, requiring teachers in the public schools to pledge support of the Constitution of the United States and of the State of New York.

Not for them—the Constitution of the United States—say these 700 teachers in our schools.

It may be true that precisely the same oath is required from the President of the United States, from the Justices of its Supreme Court and from every other elected or appointed public official.

But these teachers—FALSE TEACHERS—profess that the bill will destroy their "academic freedom" and that in time of war it will make them "puppets of the War Department." They declare it to be a species of "regimentation," to which they will not submit.

WHAT is this "academic freedom" which finds loyalty to the Constitution of the United States a fettering restriction and an attempt at "regimentation"?

These protestants must be Communists, enemies of social order, enemies of the country and of its institutions.

That we have such evil and perverse people in our midst is well known. Most of them are of alien origin, of recent arrival in this country, and unable to understand, much less appreciate, democratic institutions. They have brought to this land of freedom and wider opportunity the hatreds and obsessions formed abroad, under harsh conditions from which this country offered them asylum.

That they have benefited from their new-found freedom is shown in the fact that they have attained to positions as teachers in our schools. But apparently they are unworthy of such trust. They do not deserve such recognition and promotion. At heart they are enemies of America, abusing positions of confidence and generous reward to undermine the country that shelters them.

Such people must be rooted out like germs of pollution and disease. They are poisoning our schools and defeating the ends for which free schools are maintained under our form of government.

The signers of the petition present a curious medley of alien and non-American names. They are plainly enemies, come from without, but, unfortunately, now settled within our gates.

* * *

THE petition was circulated through the schools by a group known as "The Teachers Anti-War Committee," with headquarters at 112 East 19th street. The committee is an affiliate of the American League Against War and Fascism. A spokesman of the latter denies that it is Communistic, but admits that it would not reject Communist aid.

The league, however, is an off-shoot of the United States Congress Against War, the secretary of which is Donald Henderson, former instructor at Columbia University, who was ousted because of Communistic leanings; while Earl Browder, its vice-chairman, is general secretary of the National Communist Party.

The United States Congress Against War, which is the parent body of both the Teachers Anti-War Committee and the League Against War and Fascism, is clearly a Communist organization, with many names among its membership and committees only known through Communist utterances and activities.

THAT ORGANIZATIONS OF THIS TYPE, AND PEOPLE OF THIS CHARACTER SHOULD GAIN A FOOTING IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS IS ABHORRENT TO THE LAST DEGREE!

Every one who signed this petition should be dismissed as lacking in the first essentials of a teacher in the schools—loyalty to our country and our government.

Banking Record Is Good

The State of Massachusetts has made an enviable record in the preservation of its solid banking structure and in the liquidation of the banks which had to be closed, as Leopold M. Goulston of the Central Trust Company pointed out in his thoughtful address.

When the great financial upheaval resulted from the depression and the stock market collapse, we had nearly three thousand millions of dollars on deposit in our savings banks and trust companies alone.

Some twenty-three of our banks closed, with a total deposit liability of $109,000,000 due 300,000 depositors. These are large figures of default, it is true, but, measured by the tragic occurrences elsewhere, they showed our banking structure to be the soundest of most any Commonwealth in the United States.

In the period of liquidation, eleven of the twenty-three closed banks have been reopened or reorganized, all the depositors have received some payments, 75,000 depositors have been paid in full and the total payments have now reached $59,000,000, or a little more than one-half of the $109,000,000 isolated from them by the bank closures.

* * *

Bank Commissioner Guy, to his credit, began to pay the affected and distressed creditors from the fluid assets on hand without resorting to the old system of delaying dividends until all the assets were thoroughly liquidated. The loans made on these assets by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the substitution of government Home Loan bonds for frozen real estate mortgages facilitated this process.

Moreover, this process has enabled the closed banks to retain ownership of some of the remaining assets until their value is appreciated by improved general business conditions. This holds out the promise that the distressed depositors will in the future receive more dividends to reduce the loss they have suffered.

Of course, there is still left another process by which the delay would be obviated and by which the aggrieved depositors in the closed State banks which are members of the Federal Reserve system would be compensated in full. This is by adoption of the McLeod Bill by the Congress of the United States.

The McLeod Bill provides that the depositors of the banks shall be paid in full. It provides further that all the assets of these banks shall be held indefinitely by the national government until such time as they may be liquidated with complete advantage. In short, it contains the essential elements which would make the prided Massachusetts system effective 100 per cent.

THE EMPTY WINDOW OF DREAMS

For seven years, summer or winter, through storm or sun, Richard Martin sat on a bench in Central Park, New York, and stared at a certain window, fifteen stories above his head. Behind that window lived a woman. The staring man could not have seen her if she had come to the window, night not even have recognized her if he passed him. But once upon a time —

Elsie Robinson

It began years before at a dance in New York. Henry Martin had lived for 26 years when he went to that dance. But from the hour he met pretty, widowed Mrs. Leckie those years ceased to matter. For the first time he felt really alive. At last he knew why he had been born!

For Mrs. Leckie, however, the hour had no such glamorous significance. Henry Martin was just another young man. Nor did his ardent courtship, in the days following, remove him from that category. She returned to Texas. He pursued her; tried vainly to see her; followed her back to New York. Still he remained just another young man. But a pesky one.

Henry had been a slender, eager youngsters on the night of that memorable dance. Life was before him. He was rarin' to go. Where? He didn't know. But something would turn up! Mrs. Leckie turned up—and Henry stopped right there.

Seven years went—years that held the last, bright flame of youth. Hurrying past the bench went mobs of other men intent on building their lives, turning dreams into reality. But of that grim and glorious spectacle Henry Martin saw nothing. Life for him centered in one small window.

Ashamed? Regretful? Why should he be? Was he not giving his life for romance? Other men might spend themselves on the shoddy adventure of work. But he was living for love!

So Henry Martin, loafing away the years on a park bench, pleasantly and proudly rationalised—while the youth within him died and the bloat of old age crept over him in a grey and greasy tide.

Then suddenly one morning fate stripped Henry Martin of his pleasing picture of himself. The window was empty. Mrs. Leckie had left New York for good. He could still sit and stare, if he wished, but he could no longer dramatize that staring, even to himself. He could no longer pretend to be Life's Loyalest Lover. He was just a Park Bench Bum!

What did he think. I wonder, as this fact thudded home to him? How did he feel as he rose slowly out of his wrecked dream, out of his wasted years, and went stumbling into the avenue where he had made no place, with eyes that still stared—but that now, at last, saw himself and his dream for what they really were?

A true story? Yes. But not just a true story about Henry Martin.

A TRUE STORY ABOUT MILLIONS OF US WHO SPEND OUR LIVES STARING AT SOME EMPTY WINDOW.

Behind that window there once flamed some brief, bright dream. Love, perhaps—but far more often our own quickened vanity. Some sudden vision of power, glittering fame, which swooped upon our timid, colorless days; clutches our feverish, frustrated imaginations, glorifies us to ourselves.

Can we turn that dream into reality? Perhaps—if we aren't too lazy, too cowardly. Or we can find a better dream, a greater reality.

But it's easier to sit and stare!

Easier to let life drift while we loaf on some park bench of self-pity, or resentment, or wounded egotism, staring at the darkened window of the past.

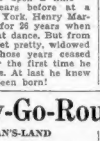
But some day the inevitable hour will come—perhaps with our dying breath—when we will see that the window has long been empty; when we will perceive ourselves and our foolish dreams as they really are.

How will we feel then, I wonder, as we stumble out into that highway in which we have made no place?

Marry-Go-Round -:- By Helen Rowland

NO-MAN'S-LAND

What chance has a man against a woman, at this time of year? What SAY has a mere cushion in the things which concern him most — the place where he shall live, the sort of bed in which he must sleep, or even the chair and the corner in which he must sit to read his newspaper?



Helen Rowland

Not a glimmer—not an ectoplasm of a chance! No man has ever been consulted about such things. No woman has ever thought to ask a man what color-scheme he preferred for his own room or where he wanted his bed set up. Yet, every spring, a man is practically torn up by the roots and planted in a brand new environment, so that he feels like a goldfish out of its bowl.

Whether the Little Woman is opening the country house, refurbishing the beach bungalow or merely "doing over" the old apartment and changing the furniture around, this is the one painful period of the year for the man, who doesn't know what terrifying new thing he is coming home to, evenings.

A man is a creature of habit, and he HATES change! Even a new chintz cover on his favorite padded arm-chair or a new shade on his reading-lamp makes him feel like a "lost soul" for weeks.

Woman has tormented men for ages by her passion for the vagaries of interior decoration. She has put him through the endurance test of stiff Queen Anne furniture, the horrors of back-breaking mission furniture, the rigidity of Colonial furniture and the painful insecurity of Louis Quinze furniture. And now, she is trying to fold him up into modernistic furniture, which scarcely gives a normal-sized man room to stretch his legs.

But she never asks a man what he wants or what he LIKES! When a woman decides on a color scheme or a "period," man HAS to take it and like it!

A man likes colorful, cheerful, welcoming rooms. These cold, operating-room, modernistic effects express his spirits and suppress his soul. They seem to be calling him to the monastic life and eternal bachelorhood.

A man likes a simple, inviting, uncluttered living-room with plenty of places where he can scatter newspapers, pipes and books. But some women just can't bear a room in which every spot is not filled or "decorated" —like a show-room at an auction sale.

Most of all, a man likes to feel, after a hard day at the office, that he can go home in the serene confidence that he will find his favorite arm-chair, his old house-coat, and his comfy old slippers waiting for him. And it's always a shock to discover that the chair has been sent to the upholsterer's, the slippers have gone to the ash-man and the janitor is wearing the old coat (burnt holes and all)!

But what can he DO about it? This is the time of year when HOME is "No-Man's-Land!"

STRUGGLE

Ever and ever the world rolls on,
And ever man's lot must be
To bear some care till the day be gone
And nighttime sets him free.
For whatever the goal that he would attain
He must reach it through struggle and loss and pain.

Never by law will trouble be stopped,
Or the hand of death be stayed,
Although easier life be made.
For man must labor and woman must spin,
For the happines which they hope to win.

Change may fashion its customs new,
But ever will life remain
A dream of something man hopes to do,
And an inch of growth to gain.
For trouble and trial and grief must be

By Edwin C. Hill

The crowded East Side of New York—its street boys and its patriarchs alike—called him "Old Ridley," as he moved in silence through the slums. A stranger, seeing him, must have paused and murmured: "surely a character out of Dickens." And the characterization would have been oddly accurate, for the old man's father, the first Edward Ridley, had fled the England of Dickens in 1849 to escape the debtors' prison which kindly Mr. Pickwick and Micawber had known so well.

This son, Edward Albert Ridley, at 83 years, had his office in a sub-cellar 33 feet below the sidewalks of New York. He invariably wore an overcoat, sometimes two, and his great white beard straggled almost to his waist. And yet he was a man of $4,000,000, the last of the Ridleys, the merchant princes of the 70's and the 80's. The first Ridley had pyramided his pedlar's pack into a department store, which in 1887 did a business of $6,000,000, employed two thousand five hundred persons and catered to the Astors, the Vanderbilts and the Goulds. Then northward the course of Manhattan took its way. But the Ridleys stayed behind, secure in their belief that the mountain would come to Mahomet.

It was not to be. Broadway, Sixth ave. and Fifth ave. took the place of Grand and Allen sts., and the House of Ridley went into decline, finally to pass out in 1901. For another 33 years, Edward Ridley stayed at the old diggings, managing his real estate affairs in his subterranean office. And with him stayed Herman Mosnach, as his secretary. On the third of January, 1931, Edward Ridley found the body of Mosnach on the floor of the sub-cellar, riddled with bullets.

POLICE FIND BODIES

"The murderer meant to get me. My turn is next," said Old Ridley, but he went on, as usual, about his affairs. On the tenth of May of last year the police found the bodies of Ridley and of his new secretary, Louis Weinstein, on the same stones, murdered as had been Mosnach, and by the same weapon. Recently, in the Surrogate's court of New York county, the Surrogate, after weighing the facts of a strange story, dismissed the claim of 67-year-old Jens Nelson to the Ridley estate. The trail of this trial has led to Norway and to a lumber camps of Michigan. Nelson told this story:

Edward Ridley, when 21, married Orline Nelson, a Norwegian immigrant girl, against the wishes of his father and then grew her up on the threat of being disinherited. She went to her brother, who was working in a lumber camp in northern Michigan and there he was born, Jens Nelson, the son of Orline and Edward Albert Ridley. He offers legal documents to prove his case.

He has submitted the testimony of the husband of Ridley's dead sister, that he told him that Ridley had married a Norwegian girl and then forsaken her. The lawyers for the estate branded Nelson's claim a fraud and the court threw it out. The greater mystery remains—that of the murders of the Allen st. cellar. Strange and many have been the happenings in old New York in the last quarter of a century, but it has known nothing more bizarre, in fact or fiction, than the Ridley case.

* * *

Dr. Walter Pitkin has made famous the phrase, "Life Begins at Forty," and he has most of us believing it. And those who do not, may reflect on the cases of two young ladies who appear in the news—one 73 years young who starts out to sing her way around the world—the other a fledgling of 96 years who, with a fierce pride in her ability to earn her own living, thinks nothing of a five-mile tramp each day through New York's theatrical district in her canvassing business.

VOICE ALWAYS YOUNG

The singer is Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, of the voice that never grows old. She has set out on a two-year tour which will take her as far as Australia. She was sick last fall, close to dying, when she decided that she had to make another round of the globe. "I thought mitt myself," she says, "that I am too young to go and I want once more to see the world. I said mitt myself, why should I not see the beautiful world? I believe in God and I want to live a little longer. It may be beautiful over there where at last I am going, but why! it is also very beautiful here." And so Mme. Schumann-Heink is out trouping and heading for all lands but one. "You know very well," she says, "that Mr. Hitler, he don't like me. I don't wish to be beheaded. But Austria, yes, I go there and visit the graves of my father and mother once more."

Our lady of ninety-six summers is Mrs. Annie Elms, once an actress, who very recently played a part in the films. There isn't a week-day, rain, hail, snow or shine, that Annie doesn't travel with her stock of needles, pins, threads, powder, cosmetics and puffs, all last-minute necessaries in the dressing rooms.

But the best they get from her at to-day she knows the world and so actively, is that her mind is at ease and that she is self-sufficient.

When it was mentioned to Annie Elms that she certainly is entitled to an old age pension, she brushed aside the thought. "Why," she exclaimed, "I would loss my self-respect! I don't need any help from anybody. I can make my own way."

Bon voyage, Mme. Ernestine! Happy days, Mme. Annie! We salute you as the poets hailed the women of Sparta.

Nation Will Celebrate 300 Years of Education

By James T. Williams, Jr.

Under the leadership of President Roosevelt the American people will celebrate during the year 1935 three centuries of progress in secondary school education in the United States.

This celebration, will center in the high schools of the country, which will commemorate the founding in 1635 of the first American school of secondary grade. This was the Boston Latin School. It was established one year before the founding of the President's alma mater, Harvard University.

DAVIS HEADS WORK

A committee appointed by the department of secondary school principals of the National Education Association has been planning for the last four years a national celebration of this event. All high schools will be urged to take part by presenting to local communities north, east, south and west a graphic portrayal of the contribution which the household of the nation owes to its high schools.

C. O. Davis, professor of secondary education at the University of Michigan, is general chairman of the tercentenary celebration committee, from reports received from various sub-committees which are working on plans for the observance of this anniversary, is convinced that every high school in the country will take part.

High school teachers and pupils all over the country have been invited to help in the preparations for this celebration and the part which the federal government will take is now under consideration.

There are many things the federal government could do in connection with this observance that would help to make it truly national and worthy of the event it will commemorate. For one thing it might offer to build a suitable home for the federal office of education. This important agency is now housed in a rented building in which it has recently been assigned quarters that are far from adequate.

SURPRISED AT NEGLECT

Visitors to the national capital are surprised to find education so neglected when agriculture, commerce and labor, the public health service and other agencies to promote the public welfare are so generously provided for.

They see the triangle of justice now nearing completion. It will add greatly to the architectural beauty of the federal city. It includes the Archives building, which will offer a future home to the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States and other state papers which trace the history of the government from its foundation.

Other buildings in this new triangle between the White House and capitol which face on Constitution ave. are the department of justice building, which the triangle logically takes its name. Also the post office department and the departments of commerce and labor. Across the mall is the largest of all the buildings that house the executive branch of the federal government—the department of agriculture.

Before President Roosevelt leaves the White House he will probably be given by Congress the privilege of completing a new triangle between White House and the Lincoln Memorial —the triangle of the common defense.

The first of the buildings that will eventually constitute this triangle has recently been completed. It is the new home of the public health service. In the same area will be buildings to house the War and Navy Department.

STATES HOLD RIGHT OF WAY

In the protection of the public health and the education of the youth the states hold the right of the line. Theirs is the responsibility for supporting and controlling these activities under the leadership of the federal government.

The federal office of education, which is urgently in need of a home, would seem to find a logical location within the proposed triangle of the common defense. Next year would be an appropriate time to start the building of this new home for education. The structure might well be the contribution of the federal government to the observance of three centuries of progress in American secondary school education.
